REDEVELOPMENT WILL GO ON DESPITE 'HUMILIATING U-TURN'

By MATHEW BEECH

mathew.beech@kosmedia.co.uk

TOWN chiefs say they have "no choice" but to push ahead with plans for huge redevelopment, despite a mounting public backlash.

And they say that means plans to transform Chilmington Green, Willesborough Leas and Tenterden have to go ahead.

However, it does seem that existing plans for Godinton may be scrapped a decision hailed by opponents as a "humiliating U-turn" for the council's ruling group.

Leader of Ashford Borough Council, Cllr Peter Wood, also took a swipe at the former Labour government, as he addressed council members at Thursday night's executive committee meeting.

Cllr Wood said: "The very pertinent views of the Godinton residents, the lobbying of the two ward members, the views of the landowner and the substantial alternative brownfield site that has come forward, all lead me personally to conclude that the development proposed at Godinton will not occur.

"Clearly, as leader, I would not, and should not, circumvent due process, but nevertheless I sense that my colleagues share my views on Godinton and so I believe my prediction is a sound one."

He added the views expressed on plans near the William Harvey Hospital will be "very carefully considered". He also stressed that nothing was set in stone over plans for redevelopment in Tenterden. He said: "The Rural Sites Plan has been formally adopted and thus it has legal status and has established the principle of development in Tenterden and a number of the villages. Nevertheless, there is still significant scope for the local community to

Ben thirsts for Afghan return

BRAVE Trooper Ben Thomason is set to jet back into the UK next month after a tour of duty in war-torn Afghanistan.

The 22-year-old, who lives in Ashford, is currently serving with the 2nd Royal Tank Regiment in Afghanistan, as a Warthog Armoured Fighting Vehicle (AFV) driver. He returns home in April.

And he admits he cannot wait to get back down to his local - the Hoodeners Horse in Great Chart.

His regiment have spent several months in the desert pursuing and fighting Taliban insurgents.

As a driver, Tpr Thomason is not only responsible for the maintenance and care of his Warthog, but also for helping his commander to spot and target enemy positions during frequent firefights.

Tax bill is on its way to you

COUNCIL tax bills are dropping through letterboxes throughout Ashford this week. Borough councillors have been congratulating themselves that they have managed to freeze the tax for the eighth year running.

At the same time Kent County Council, the Kent Police Authority and Kent and Medway Fire and Rescue Service has frozen their precepts. But parish and town councils may have to raise theirs given the current financial squeeze.

It will cost Band D homeowners £1,423.82 tax next year at a rate of £27.38 a week.

VULNERABLE children are entering the UK on Kent's high-speed rail network before being forced into slavery or prostitution.

London Assembly chairwoman Baroness Dee Doocey says the failure to carry out welfare checks at Ashford International, as well as Ebbsfleet and St Pancras is putting unaccompanied minors at risk of serious harm.

shape the scale, nature and phasing of any development by actively participating in the community planning workshops and by participating in site-specific planning applications.

"Those who suggest the plans for Tenterden are 'cast in stone' and must be fought are ignoring the reality that all is yet to be played for.

"As for Chilmington; this site forms part of the Core Strategy that was adopted while we suffered under the burden of the Labour government dictates. This is also a document with legal status that we cannot simply abandon.

"To do so would require consent from the Secretary of State, which we know would not be given – he would simply instruct us to bring forward the formal review of the Core Strategy, which we're doing anyway.

"If, as some advocate, we were arbitrarily to suspend the adopted Core Strategy, in part or in full, then we would (a) lay ourselves open to litigation by developers et al and (b) create a free-for-all for developers.

"It's far more sensible for Chilmington to move forward through a process of sensible engagement between the community, developers and ourselves and to let the Core Strategy Review determine whether later phases of the process should be amended or removed.

"Rather than open up the prospect of greenfield development dotted all around the borough, with all the uncertainty that will cause, I believe we should press on with Chilmington."

The row over planning for the council has already prompted direct action from residents, with independent candidates standing in every ward in a bid to capture the vote of those opposing the plans.

Andrew Mortimer and Simon Thomason, prospective Ashford Independent candidates for Willesborough North, issued a joint statement.

They said: "We are delighted that the residents have forced Ashford council to scrap the Godinton development.

Humiliating

"This is a humiliating U-turn for the council's ruling group, including the incumbent ward members for Godinton, who have been working on the plans for years.

the plans for years.
"We have been solemnly informed by the council that the Core Strategy is a legally-binding document and that all sorts of horrifying scenarios would ensue if it were not followed.

"The scrapping of the Godinton development proves that the Core Strategy is not legally binding, and that the council has been misleading the public in order to justify their development obsession.

"Despite this humiliating concession, Ashford Borough Council remains determined to press ahead with Labour's development programme, even though the coalition government has now removed the targets that formed the foundation of the Core Strategy.

"Peter Wood, the leader of Ashford Council, seems intent on spinning the legal context of these developments in order to justify his clique's obsession with unnecessary and unwanted greenfield development.

"There is no reason why the Core Strategy cannot now be immediately reviewed with a view to removing the other greenfield developments.

"However, if the ruling group would rather lose the elections and leave the residents to do it, then that's fine by us.

by us.

"It is very convenient that a brown-field site happened to become available to accommodate the development earmarked for Godinton, just as the council faces enormous political pressure from residents in the run-up to an election.

"The council seems to be applying different sets of rules to each of the proposed greenfield development sites.

"Clearly a cynical political calculation has been made in deciding to sacrifice a 230-unit development to save two Conservative seats on the borough council.

"Development decisions should be made to serve local communities, rather than the dirty political interests of a clique of councillors.

"Again, Ashford council's ruling group have shown that they are unfit to manage growth in the borough."

Council tax bills frozen, thanks to 'prudent' cuts

Borough council leader Cllr Peter Wood said: "We are working in very difficult times, but we are delighted that, due to prudent financial planning, we have been able to freeze the council tax.

"We are also extremely proud that even in difficult financial circumstances we are able to offer the lowest council tax in Kent while maintaining a high level of service to our residents."

Independent group leader Peter Davison welcomed the tax freeze.

Red Nose Day team has a mountain to climb

PUTTING the fun into By JAMES BENJAMIN fundraising, Comic Relief returns with Red Nose Day sparking a host of events across the borough.

At the Julie Rose Stadium there will be a fancy-dress mile getting under way at 6.15pm on Friday.

There is a donation fee of at least £1, with optional fancy dress and red noses for all competitors.

No pre-entry is required and competitors are encouraged just to turn up and take part. All the money raised will go towards Red Nose Day

Schools will be getting in on the act too, with many holding fundraising events, or allowing children to come in non-uniform or wearing something red, in return for a donation.

Meanwhile, local education and activity centre Kingswood Grosvenor Hall has been a hive of activity all week, as youngsters aim to climb the height of Mount Everest to raise money for Comic Relief.

Since Monday, children and staff at the Kingswood Education and Activity Centre have been scaling Grosvenor Hall's huge climbing wall each evening, with the aim of climbing the height of the world's tallest mountain by the end of this week.

A spokesman for the venue said: "Mount Everest is a heady 8,848 metres, so this is no easy challenge for the 270 children who will be joining in the climb with their teachers."

The challenge culminates on Friday.

Henry Teuma, event organiser at Kingswood Grosvenor Hall, said: "Everyone at the centre is really excited about our Everest climb this

"The whole aim behind Kingswood is to challenge and develop children, not only academically, but also physically and personally. If we can do this whilst raising money to help Comic Relief, all the better.'

Even cinema-goers have helped raise cash. Special showings of new movie the Chalet Girl at Ashford's Cineworld complex, prior to its official release, saw all cash go to Comic

First launched in 1988, Red Nose Day is designed to raise as much cash as possible to change the lives of people across the UK and Africa.

Staged every two years, it culminates in a star-studded telethon on the BBC, with viewers urged to dig deep and call in with donations.

In 2009, more than £82 million was raised to transform lives.

Disillusioned Anglicans look to Rome for tradition

CHURCHES have seen their congregations decimated this week after dissident Anglican priests and their parishioners turned to Rome.

Ash Wednesday marked the beginning of the exodus in both Sevenoaks and Tunbridge Wells, as worshippers opted instead to celebrate their first mass at Catholic churches.

In Tunbridge Wells, Father Ed Tomlinson led 70 worshippers to join St Anselm's Roman Catholic Church in Pembury, leaving a congregation of just 15 at his former church, St Barnabas.

Meanwhile, Father Ivan Aquilina took 40 parishioners with him to St Thomas' Roman Catholic Church in Sevenoaks, leaving 50 at the town's St John the Baptist Church.

They join about 600 Anglicans nationally who have decided to leave the Church of England over liberal reforms such as the ordination of women bishops.

Pope Benedict XVI has created a body called the English Ordinariate, for Church of England traditionalists who want to switch allegiance to Rome while retaining some of their Anglican customs.

Father Tomlinson said: "The big day for us was last Sunday, when we said goodbye. Wednesday was the beginning of Lent and we are joining with the Catholic Church to celebrate that."

Tentative

He described this week's move as a "very quiet, tentative first-step" in preparing to convert to the Ordinariate for Holy Week at Easter.

The future of St Barnabas in Stanley Road looks bleak with just 15 Anglican parishioners left.

"It makes its viability very difficult," Father Tomlinson said. "One of the really sad things is that I proposed to the Church of England we might share the building and work together, but the Church of England has been a bit sore about that, so we're leaving with nothing. "We've not changed what we teach, what has

"We've not changed what we teach, what has changed is the wider Church of England, who want to worship in a different way. It was a matter of standing up for what we believe in."

Father Aquilina spoke about his decision to leave the Church of England and his former church in Quaker's Hall Lane.

"The most important thing that moved me to join the Ordinariate is Jesus – I believe that we have to be faithful to what he said."

Speaking about the changes in the Church of England, he added: "The ordination of women to the priesthood is just part. It is a question of the unity of the church and not working together on important issues such as re-marrying divorcees and gay marriages. The Church of England is deciding, rather than talking with Christians to find a common decision."

£250m cost of getting our roads up to scratch

By Marijke Cox

mariike.cox@kosmedia.co.uk

COUNTY Hall's highways chiefs have admitted it would take a one-off payment of £250 million to bring Kent's 5,000 miles of road up to standard.

But with £95m savings needed overall in the authority's budget for 2011/12 and a 20 per cent drop in the roads' money pot, Kent County Council has had to devise resourceful ways to ensure efficient maintenance of our pothole-ridden highways.

A KCC spokesman said the £250m was a one-off figure that would allow the authority to restore the county's roads, covering a wide range of works.

He stressed that if the money was spent, it would not include emergency works, but non-urgent, low-grade maintenance.

"If this sum were spent on our roads, they would still require between £50-60m annually to maintain," he said.

Leader of KCC Paul Carter told the BBC the authority was spending £40-£50m on roads – without an initial £250m blitz.

With mounting financial pressure and a reduction in Government grants of about 20 per cent for highways, the authority has had to come up with schemes to keep Kent's drivers moving.

Director of Kent Highway Services,

Director of Kent Highway Services, John Burr, said efforts were being concentrated through efficiency savings, contract control and smarter ways of working. This includes using pre-wet salting when gritting the roads, which involves spraying a saline solution on to salt as it is fired out, causing it to stick to the road surface and prevent it from being blown off.

Pair jailed for torture attack

TWO young women jailed for imprisoning and torturing a former friend during a horrific 18-hour attack after a row over a man have had their sentences upheld.

Georgia Fenn, 18, was subject to a brutal attack which included being scalded with boiling water mixed with sugar.

Lucy Viner-Mood, 22, and Lois Gibson, 18, both of Homewood Road, Langton Green, were sentenced at Maidstone Crown Court last year.

Viner-Mood was given a five-year jail term for false imprisonment and three-and-a-half years for assault occasioning actual bodily harm (ABH), to run concurrently. Her accomplice, Gibson, was sentenced to three years for false imprisonment and two years for ABH, also to run at the same time.

Whale buried

THE 45-foot-long sperm whale washed up at Pegwell Bay in Ramsgate was cut up and removed last weekend.

Samples, including parts of its jawbone, have been taken away for further examination at the Natural History Museum, while the rest of the carcass has been buried in a landfill site.

An on-site autopsy revealed the juvenile hadn't eaten for up to four days before it was washed ashore last week.

POT HOLES: Two winters of bad weather have wreaked havoc on roads across Kent Growth retardants are also being used on grass verges so they require fewer cuts.

Mr Burr said smarter ways of working

Mr Burr said smarter ways of working would help keep Kent moving and improve the 5,000-mile road network.

"Maintaining and improving the safety of our roads remains our top priority," he said.

"Further funds are also invested in preventative treatments. This type of investment helps reduce costs in the longer term."

In January, a month-long pothole blitz was launched involving an army of tarmac firms fixing dangerous potholes across the county.

Last year a 'find and fix' campaign was rolled out to repair damage to roads caused by snow and ice.

Over the next few weeks KCC will assess the damage caused to highways during the winter with a view to running a similar campaign this year.

Hero's return to finest hour

WING Commander Robert Foster DFC, of 605 Squadron, is one of the last surviving members of what Winston Churchill famously called 'The Few'.

He flew Hurricanes during the Battle of Britain and last weekend went along to the memorial to the aerial conflict on the cliffs at Capel le Ferne, where a replica Spitfire was being placed on display. It is a faithful rendition of the prototype of the famous warplane.

"I always enjoy coming here, it is very moving," he said. "I know there is a monument in London but this seems more relevant. It was in these skies and over the White Cliffs that the Battle of Britain was mainly fought."

Shortly before World War Two, Wing Cmdr

Shortly before World War Two, Wing Cmdr Foster learnt to fly with the Royal Air Force Volunteer Reserve.

Called up for service in September, 1939, he completed his training and was posted to 605 Squadron, equipped with Hawker Hurricane fighters. By early September, 1940, he and his squadron were in the thick of the air fighting over southern England, operating from Croydon.

First sortie

"I flew my first operational sortie on September 7, the day the Blitz on London really started," he said.

"I remember firing into the enemy formations, but I don't think I hit anything.

"I do remember the first chap I shot down. We were bounced [attacked and surprised] by some ME109s [Luftwaffe fighters] who came out of the sun.

"My friend Charles English's aircraft was hit. He tried to get out but his parachute stuck and he didn't make it. I spun away and as I pulled out I could see a 109 right in front of me. I was behind him and he didn't see me, so I gave him a two or three second burst and he crashed."

Wing Cmdr Foster – then a Pilot Officer – usually intercepted attacking fighter and bomber formations over Sussex and would then frequently chase them across Kentish skies. He said he only remembers the war when he is asked about it – and during last year's 70th anniversary "it was all I was ever asked about".

However his recollections are extremely clear. "I remember once going after some ME110s [twin engine fighters] and my engine blew up – I thought I'd been hit," he said

"There was smoke and glycol [engine coolant] all over the place and later I found it was just a mechanical fault. I saw a large field and managed to get down on it – turned out to be Gatwick.

Bombed

"Another time I was running out of fuel and knew I wouldn't get home – so I put down at West Malling which had just been bombed. The people there were very upset with me. The commanding officer shouted at me: 'Get off – as soon as the Germans see a plane here they bomb us'. So I left – after getting my fuel, of course."

But not all air combat ended so safely. "We attacked some 109s over Maidstone and drove them off," Wing Cmdr Foster said. "But my squadron CO stuck around. Maybe he wanted to see if any of the enemy were still there. But he was attacked and shot down and died."

Surviving the battle, Wing Cmdr Foster joined 54 Squadron and later became an RAF instructor. His unit became part of a group sent out to Australia to help defend the Darwin area and engaged the Japanese incursions throughout 1943.

He finished the war with seven confirmed victories and three probables.

Awarded the DFC for his efforts, he returned to the UK and was given an assignment with an RAF public relations unit, ending up in Normandy within three weeks of the invasion of 1944.

Often serving right up in the frontline, Wing Cmdr Foster saw the war at very close hand, and then quite by chance became one of the first RAF officers to enter Paris with the liberating French army, and again by chance, was in General Charles de Gaulle's triumphant procession down the Champs-Élysées

Flood defence action 'vital to save coastline'

By STEVE KNIGHT

steve.knight@kosmedia.co.uk

COASTAL experts have warned that preparations must be made now to prevent parts of Kent being lost to the sea forever.

According to new research by the Joseph Rowntree Foundation, the county's extensive coastline is one of the most at-risk areas in the UK, due to the expected rise in global sea levels and increased storm frequency over the next 90 years.

The study – Impacts of Climate Change on Disadvantaged UK Coastal Communities – comes just weeks after it was revealed that global warming played a part in causing the floods of 2000, that hit Maidstone and Tonbridge in particular.

Jeremy Richardson, director of the engineering consultancy URS-Scott Wilson, which co-authored the document said: "There's a need for a realistic debate on how to protect coastal regions because some tough choices are going to have to be made.

"We need to consider the risks, how we're going to spend the money, and what areas we must protect first.

"It would be great to start work on this straight away, but that's going to be terribly difficult to do until we get enough people who understand the full extent of the issues."

According to the Rowntree report, the parts of Kent on the Thames Estuary are most vulnerable to erosion, due to their low-lying and softsediment coasts.

Flooding

Increased rainfall is the main cause of concern for people living on the northern or western coastlines.

In 2009, the Environment Agency revealed that one in six homes in England is at risk of flooding from rivers, the sea or overflowing drains, and that investment in flood defences will need to almost double to £1 billion a year by 2035 to £1 billion a year by 2035.

However, the Government has slashed flood defence spending by more than 20 per cent to a figure of £529 million a year for the next four years

Mr Richardson said: "The Coalition has said it realises how important flood defence is, but clearly the cuts leave us with a huge job to do.

"There is an increased number of tough decisions to make over the next few years, but we would still have these decisions without the credit crunch."

In March last year, emergency planners at Kent County Council drew up the county's most detailed flood response document ever.

The plan – which will be updated on KCC's intranet site – includes risk assessments, the role of the emergency services and which locations are most likely to flood.

Government urged to pressure drugs giant into deferring redundancies after

SANDWICH MP Laura Sandys has made an impassioned plea to Government to push Pfizer to defer redundancies to give staff a better chance of finding jobs.

In a parliamentary debate on Monday, Ms Sandys criticised the drugs giant for giving employees just 90 days to explore new work opportunities. Addressing science minister David Willetts, she called on the Government to speak to the company.

"Pfizer has been at Sandwich for 60 years, but has given its staff and the community just 90 days to readjust," she said.

"We know significant numbers of staff will be made redundant soon with little time for support to be put in place in terms of helping them set up businesses or identify investors who might want to buy some of the assets and keep those important jobs at the site in Sandwich.

"While I pay tribute to the local management who are trying to put in place new opportuni-ties, they too have little time to ensure jobs stay before redundancies are issued.

"This is a great disappointment, as there are some really exciting opportunities. The site and the staff have real potential."

Ms Sandys said more time was needed from Pfizer to give staff a chance to find new opportunities in the wake of the bombshell last month, when the drugs giant announced it would be pulling out of Sandwich, with the loss of 2,400 jobs.

Taking into consideration contractors at the site and public sector cutbacks, Ms Sandys said the figure could see an additional 5,000 jobs lost in east Kent.

She stressed that staff wanting to set up businesses will not have the time to get finances together or set up packages before the dispersal of employees begins.

"We can't stop Pfizer from leaving the site - it's their decision and their responsibility but I'd like to ask the minister to help us with our discussions," she said.

'I'm not asking Pfizer to change their exit date, 2012 will be when they exit their activities in Sandwich, but that does not mean that they have to rush the redundancies now when so much has been put in place to mitigate the company's decision.

"Ninety days after 60 years. I'm not sure that is fair or reasonable. We need more time. The staff and contractors need more time and our east Kent economy needs more time."

Mr Willetts agreed with Ms Sandys that the 90-day period was a difficult prospect for Ms Sandys also called on the Government to back the creation of a life science centre at the Sandwich site and discussed the improvement of transport links to the facility.

Housing market awaits impact of the shutdown

PFIZER'S decision to pull out of Sandwich could have repercussions for the east Kent property sector as well as the jobs market.

A law firm says it expects the drug giant's withdrawal and the loss of thousands of jobs to deflate the housing market at the top end. Senior partner at Fosters Law, Edward Foster, said although the lower end of the market would most likely remain stable, those in homes worth more than £250,000 could be forced to reduce selling prices.

His warning followed the announcement by Pfizer that it was leaving Sandwich, putting at least 2,400 jobs at risk and raising concerns that many people would concerns that many people would leave the area. Mr Foster, whose firm has offices in Broadstairs, Canterbury and Herne Bay, said: "If the market is suddenly filled with properties, prices will fall. It's demand and supply.

"Prices will be pushed down and properties in places such as Ash and Wingham, where it is usually more expensive to buy, will become more accessible.

"As soon as a large supply of properties enters the market it becomes a buyers' market. Pfizer employees may have to accept a lot less than what they paid for their properties."

Mr Foster told KoS the impact would also affect rental homes where landlords would have to drop their charges.

"If you can get an executive four-bedroom house for £200 less, no-one is going to pay £200 more," he said.

Mr Foster said another effect could be proloyees 'downsizing' as a result of highly-skilled workers having to take lower-paid jobs. "This would increase demand at the lower end of the market and this area, up to £250,000, would remain stable – supply and demand would balance out," he said. "It's people with homes priced above who will be most affected.

"Unless a quick solution is reached we could see an exodus of high-paid individuals and an increase in supply of properties for sale or rent; particularly those towns and villages around Sandwich and Canterbury that make up the 'Pfizer corridor'. This is unlikely to result in a wholesale crash. Properties in the area offer great value. East Kent remains a great place to live and work.

"We have high-speed rail, excellent transport links and the Continent is a stone's throw away. We have a fantastic pool of talent and the quality of life is hard to beat. If that cannot attract inward investment, what can?"

Another property expert was not convinced Pfizer's departure would push prices down or have a severe impact on the market. Steve Evans, associate director of Oakwood Homes, which has offices across east Kent, said he believed the market would remain stable. However, he said Pfizer's decision could have an impact on the number of people moving to the area.

"I'm not expecting a large impact on the market in terms of prices – a lot depends on the time frame of the Pfizer situation," he said. "If we're looking at people leaving the area over two or three years, it's probably not going to have a large impact.

"However, people who may have been looking to make an aspirational move to the area for work may reconsider that," he said. "I think this will dampen demand."

Mother's proud tribute to Brett

THE mother of a man who died after a motorbike collision has paid tribute to him.

Brett Roberts (pictured left), 32, was involved in an accident in Leysdown, on the Isle of Sheppey, on August 5, 2010, and died later in hospital. At the closure of an inquest this week, his mother, Lenore, revealed some of Brett's organs had been donated to help others. She said: "Even now, Brett's heart is still beating. It makes me proud to think his healthy body has helped others.

"His heart was given to a 36-year-old woman who was born with a rare defect. Now she's been discharged from hospital and is no longer on a critical waiting list."

India adventure awaits cyclists

CYCLISTS have been invited to join a ride through rural Rajasthan in India to support the work of the Kent Multiple Sclerosis Therapy Centre in Canterbury.

People of all ages and all cycling abilities can join the adventure, from November 3-12.

Training advice will be provided by the organisers. The group will cycle about 400km over five days – both on and off road – and the event finishes with a visit to the Taj Mahal.

Bike India is a major fundraising initiative for the charity which has just been granted planning consent for new premises. The estimated cost of the building is £1 million.

Drivers claim a quick victory

A DRIVERS' campaign group is celebrating a possible rise in the motorway speed limit from 70mph to 80mph, claiming it was a victory for motorists.

Ian Taylor, Kent spokesman for the Association of British Drivers (ABD), said the organisation had been pushing for an increase for years.

"This is one of the things we have been campaigning for," he said. "Motorways are the fastest and yet safest roads. Most people on motorways drive at 80mph anyway.

"Driving at this speed is what most modern cars are built for."

A spokesman for the Highways Agency, which forms part of the Department for Transport, said the plans formed part of a new road safety strategy which will be considered in May. The 70mph limit was put in place almost 50 years ago. In 2009 there were 2,222 road deaths – 132 on motorways.

Transport secretary Philip Hammond said there needed to be a new set of criteria when looking at speed limits.

The ABD said substantial improvements had been made in vehicle and highway engineering and the widespread lack of compliance with the 70mph limit indicated how outdated it was.

The group also argued the 70mph limit created traffic bunching, poor lane discipline and lack of driver concentration.

Grammars 'not a step up ladder'

By STEVE KNIGHT

steve.knight@kosmedia.co.uk

WORKING class children are no more likely to climb the social ladder by attending grammar schools instead of comprehensives, new research suggests.

Kent has more grammar schools than any other county in the UK, and is one of only a handful that still operates a selective system.

But using a sample of more than 3,300 adults from across the UK, academics from the universities of Oxford and Bath Spa found that poorer children who attended comprehensives were just as likely as their grammar school equivalents to land better jobs than their parents.

Maidstone resident Rebecca Matthews chairwoman of the Stop the Eleven Plus campaign group - said the findings of the report came as little surprise.

"It's an interesting piece of research, but the idea that grammar schools provide social mobility is a complete myth anyway," she

MYTH: Social mobility is not dependent on attending grammar school, research shows

"The researchers have used data from people who are now in their 50s, so when they went to school the whole country would have been using the selective system that Kent has

"The situation now is so different because even fewer working class children get to go to grammar school. Tutoring has a hugely significant effect on whether a child passes a test or not, and only middle class people can afford it."

Of the 3,300 people studied in the report, a third had attended comprehensive schools, a quarter had attended grammar schools, and two-fifths had been educated in a secondary

No advantage

The researchers compared the jobs the adults did at the age of 33 with the work their fathers had done 17 years earlier – when the adults were 16 – to see whether they had climbed the social ladder.

All those sampled had sat a test to measure their academic ability at the age of 11.

Co-author Adam Swift said that grammar schools "confer no more advantage" to working-class children than to those from slightly more wealthy backgrounds, which Gravesendbased education expert Peter Read said demonstrated the weakness of the report.

"That is to say both categories do have an advantage," he said. "Why should they give more advantage to one group than the other?

"In fact, those of the sample who went to comprehensive schools were part of the initial wave of comprehensives, before the great abolition of grammar schools which took place in the 1970s and 80s.

"It is self-evident in nearly every wave of educational change that the first into the fray were idealistic and made it work, as this research shows. I wonder if the same results would hold true today."

Last year, a separate report by researchers at the University of Buckingham found that grammar schools were more socially-inclusive than many of the UK's best comprehensives.

It revealed that the highest-scoring compre-hensives were far less likely to take their fair share of youngsters from disadvantaged homes than the 164 remaining grammars - 33 of which are in Kent.

"My husband and I separated last year. I was at a complete loss to know what to do. Whitehead Monckton were very caring and were able to help me arrange everything without us going to court. They also sorted out the mortgage and made sure I had a new will."

Tougher controls deter immigrants

marijke.cox@kosmedia.co.uk

STRINGENT border controls have driven down the number of illegal immigrants attempting to cross the Channel by two thirds from 29,383 to 9,735 – in one year.

The decrease is being put down to the use of improved technology in northern French ports and the closure of refugee camps in Calais, sending out a message to would-be migrants that UK borders are closed.

Immigration minister and Ashford MP Damian Green said it had been made increasingly difficult for illegal immigrants to evade border controls and reach Britain.

"While the number of vehicles checked has remained stable at 1.5 million, annually, we have seen fewer attempts to cross the Channel illegally – with 9,700 individuals found last year, compared to just over 29,000 in 2009," he said.

"The increased joint working by the UK Border Agency and the French authorities at the northern French ports continues to ensure the UK's border remains protected.

Over the past five years, up until 2010, the number of illegal immigrants trying to enter the UK by crossing the Channel had risen year on year.

Between 2007 and 2008 a steep rise of almost 11,500 – 17,859 to 29,271 – was seen.

But in 2008 a new force was launched, in the form of the UK Border Agency, which saw HM Revenue and Customs, the Border and

Gove to re-examine school building plans

steve knight@kosmedia.co.uk

EDUCATION chiefs have been given until April 11 to spell out the importance of restoring the axed Building Schools for the Future project in Kent.

Last month, Kent County Council defeated the Government in a joint legal action with five other local authorities after proving that Education Secretary Michael Gove failed to consult with them prior to scrapping the scheme last July.

The celebrated £55 billion project was introduced by Labour in 2003, in a bid to improve every secondary school in the Kent's overall programme – the largest building scheme in Europe – was worth an estimated $\pounds 1.8bn$.

Mr Gove has now given the authorities involved in the case until April 11 to provide him with "any and all" information about the axed BSF projects they would like him to reconsider.

KCC leader Cllr Paul Carter said: "I genuinely believe the Secretary of State is revisiting his decision in a comprehensive fashion, as we have been asked to provide a significant amount of new evidence and documentation.

"We are working with the 14 schools in Gravesham and Thanet that were the most advanced in terms of planning and development, to make sure the submission is as robust as possible. I am much encouraged." Eleven Kent schools were rebuilt or refurbished through the BSF programme, but 40 others were told last July that the schemes they had been planning would no longer go ahead.

The 14 that will be reconsidered by Mr Gove were all 'Wave Four' projects that were at the most advanced stages of planning.

However, in a statement, Gove made clear that he is under no obligation to save any of the schools affected by the removal of funding.

He said: "I will make a decision having considered, with an open mind, all of the information gathered over the consultation period and with due regard to my equalities duties.

REVIEW: Education

chief Michael Gove

"As the judge made clear, the final decision on any given school or project still rests with me and I may save all, some, a few or none." He concluded by saying that "no-one should gain false hope from this decision".

Mr Gove added that he would not be making direct contact with the affected schools.

He said: "Local authorities will want to engage with the schools and will provide the school-level information they consider necessary for me when making my decision.'

A GROUNDBREAKING plan to transfer Dover Port into the hands of the community has taken a giant leap forward after the public voted for a referendum on the issue.

A meeting at Dover Town Hall last Thursday saw standing room only, as residents packed out the building to have a say on the future of the port.

Members of Dover People's Port Trust (DPPT) explained the details of the £200 million purchase bid, and the motion as to whether a referendum should go ahead was passed.

The vote, which will look at whether the port should be transferred into the community's control, will take place within the next 25 days.

Chairman of DPPT Neil Wiggins said he was thrilled with the outcome, and he urged people to turn out for the next vote.

"The result of the referendum is not binding on Government, but if there is a large turnout and strong vote for transferring the port to the community, it will put pressure on them," he said.

Response

"Given their flagship policy of the big society and more power in the community, I think government would find it very hard to ignore such a high level of feeling and response to the People's Port."

DPPT hopes to buy the Port of Dover with a £200m bid.

Dover MP Charlie Elphicke, who is behind the proposals, said residents can join the trust for £10. The remainder of the funds would come from City of London institutions.

Rivals Dover Harbour Board (DHB), which has run the port as a trust since 1606, asked the Government in January, 2010, for permission to privatise the asset.

But the move sparked fierce opposition, and plans were drawn up to create a community-owned port which has received widespread support, including backing from forces' sweetheart Dame Vera Lynn.

DHB, however, called the proposals "unrealistic and undeliverable".

A spokeswoman said the board remained convinced its own scheme represented the best and only option for a sustainable and growing port business.

"Properly costed, economically viable and deliverable, we look forward to a positive decision by the minister as we continue to work towards a new and transformational relationship with all our stakeholders," she said.

Cuts 'hitting future of yout

A RISE in the number of young people out of work and education is predicted to rise as a result of government spending cuts

The proportion of 16- to 24-year-olds classed as Neets – Not in Employment, Education or Training – was up at the end of 2010. A total of 938,000 (15.6 per cent) were in this category last December, the highest final-quarter figure since 2005.

But while the Government has admitted the figure is "still too high", critics claim the situation will not improve while funding for youth services continues to be cut.

"Since the election we've seen a move towards attacking young people," said Kent Youth County Council chairman Dara Farrell.

"Sure Start centres, the Education Maintenance Allowance and the Future Jobs Fund are all being cut, and the effects these decisions are having on young people are already starting to tell. We need long-term support for those classed as Neet.

Last month the youth unemployment rate reached 20.5 per cent - the highest since comparable records began in 1992.

In Medway, the proportion of 16-20-year-olds classed as Neet stands at about seven per cent.

John Paton, business manager of the Medway Youth Trust branch of Connexions, said the young people's advice service should be given extra funding so it can also target those aged 20-24.

The Coalition says it plans to tackle the rise in Neets by funding 75,000 extra adult apprenticeship places, as well as offering a new work programme to provide "personalised support and training to help unemployed young people into work".

ENTRY POINT: Children as young as 12 can travel unaccompanied on Eurostar trains

Call to check on children entering

VULNERABLE children are entering the UK on Kent's highspeed rail network before being forced into slavery or prostitution, writes Steve Knight.

That was the worrying claim made by London Assembly chairwoman Baroness Dee Doocey, who says the failure to carry out welfare checks at Ashford, Ebbsfleet and St Pancras stations is putting unaccompanied minors at risk of serious harm.

Children as young as 12 can travel unaccompanied on Eurostar trains, and need only a letter from their parents or guardians to pass through border controls in France and Belgium.

However, Baroness Doocey told KoS there was no system in place to check the authenticity of the letters.

"I do think there should be extra staff (at Kent stations) to deal with this sort of thing," she said.

"In 2003 the Metropolitan Police set up a superb team at Heathrow airport consisting of dedicated child protection workers, and in the first three months they intercepted 1,800 unaccompanied minors - a third of whom were deemed to be vulnerable.

"But now the traffickers are moving elsewhere, so we've got to make sure that we secure every location.

The Lib Dem peer quizzed Earl John Attlee - the Conservatives' immigration spokesman in the House of Lords - on the issue of child trafficking during a debate on Monday.

She was told there was no need for a specific team at St Pancras because the necessary checks were carried out by Border Agency officials in France and Belgium.

But Baroness Doocey, who was made a life peer last December, told KoS she was less than satisfied with the response.

"I was quite disappointed because I didn't really think he had taken on board the seriousness of the situation," she said.

"Only if a Border Agency officer sees a child wandering around looking lost at St Pancras will he call on a specialist, but then if you're a child trafficker you're obviously not going to let that happen.

Prostitution

"It's very worrying, because children are being brought into this country to serve as domestic slaves, for benefit fraud, and also prostitution. It's a huge problem.

A spokeswoman for the UK Border Agency confirmed that all passengers arriving at Ashford or Ebbsfleet will have been cleared for immigration purposes at controls in France and Belgium.

She added: "If there was any suspicion that a child arriving in the UK was at risk, the agency would refer to the appropriate

"Keeping Britain's border secure is a priority for the Government, which is why it is crucial we have vigilant border staff utilising the latest technology in our fight against the people traffickers, drug smugglers and illegal immigrants determined to come here and cause harm.'

Eurostar declined to comment.

KENT County Council has rejected claims it could face a string of legal challenges by failing to observe redundancy-related equality laws.

Ahead of a planned reduction of 1,500 workers over the next three to four years, the authority has been accused of failing to complete equality impact assessments (EIAs) to ensure women, disabled people and those from ethnic minority backgrounds are not unfairly targeted.

The public sector union Unison says councils like KCC are "flouting the rules" and failing to assess the true impact of the job cuts. However, the authority says it is unable to carry out EIAs on the majority of workers because detailed job loss plans have yet to be drawn up.

A spokesman added: "For the recent changes to the senior level of managers at KCC, equality impact assessments were carried out. They will continue to be part of the process as the restructure is implemented.

KCC denies ignoring rules over job cut discrimination

"While we expect to lose some posts, redundancies will be kept to a minimum through natural wastage of retirement, voluntary redundancies and by not filling all vacant posts as people

Under equality laws, councils must give 'due regard' to equality when making decisions. Completing EIAs is one of the key ways to do this.

KCC revealed in January that it must save

£95 million in the next financial year, partly due to a 10 per cent cut - or £58m - in the amount of funding it receives from the Government.

As part of the research conducted by

Unison, the council was listed alongside 179 other local authorities that have yet to complete EIAs on their at-risk workers

Unison head of local government Heather Wakefield said: "Councils are duty-bound to make sure job cuts do not have a disproportionate impact on women, workers with disabilities or ethnic minority staff.

"But this survey shows they are flouting the rules and ploughing ahead with heavy job cuts regardless.
"Councils should put the brakes on and take a closer look at the effect of job cuts, because there's a real chance that heavy job losses will fall disproportionately on to these groups.

There's growing proof that the Tory-led Government's actions are bad for women and bad for equality, but it's easy street for the party's beloved bankers.

"In the 100 years since the first International Women's Day, great strides towards fairness have been taken.

"But this hard-won progress must not be sacrificed to pay for the recession."

MP warns against military action

A KENT MP has called for humanitarian aid for Libya, but has warned against the UK starting military action to oust Colonel Gaddafi, pictured.

Canterbury MP Julian Brazier told the Commons Foreign Secretary William Hague: "Humanitarian aid backed by military means is very unlikely to be seen in that way by the protagonists in a civil war.'

Mr Brazier later added: "The Government has made it clear that Colonel Gaddafi must go. Throughout the crises in Egypt and Tunisia, the UK Government has been careful to say the people of these countries must own the solution. In the case of Libya, the people have risen up against Colonel Gaddafi.

"The aid effort should be led by leading humanitarian organisations from across the world. Aid supported by military means would risk drawing us into another major

The event, the first of its kind by Delta Company during its seven-month tour in Helmand, was attended by more than 160 people over two days

Captain Lowe and local ANP commander Colonel Abdul Sattar Noorzai spoke on Radio Nahr-e Saraj, which transmits from Patrol Base Attal, on both evenings. They fielded veterinary questions from farmers who telephoned the radio station with enquires about how best to look after the animals in their care.

Captain Lowe said: "The aim of these two days was to educate the local people on modern methods of animal husbandry practices and medical care.

"This knowledge will help to make them more self-reliant and also help to improve their livelihoods.

Colonel Sattar Noorzai said: "This kind of education is important for improving life for the people. I have emphasised how beneficial this is on the local radio station so future events will see even more people attend."

Delta Company is partnered with the Afghan National Police, protecting the people of Lashkar Gah district and ensuring they have a responsible police force. The troop also assists the ANP in gathering information on insurgents in the area and conducts operations to ensure the insurgents are unable to impact on the daily life of the people.

Marlowe to preview West End hit shows

By CHRIS BRITCHER

chris.britcher@kosmedia.co.uk

THEATRE chiefs have unveiled the line-up for the first season at the new multi-million pound stateof-the-art Marlowe Theatre in Canterbury.

And it includes a pre-West End preview of what is expected to be one of musical theatre's big hits, and the world premiere of a major new dance production.

What's more, the traditionally hugely-popular pantomime is set to be one of the biggest and best yet, with an enhanced budget, a bigname cast due to be confirmed soon, and the ambition to be the best in the South East.

director Theatre Mark Everett revealed the line-up this week and said: "Now we're back in business. After all the preparation, now we're back putting on shows, promoting them and selling tickets. It feels good to be back.

"There are at least two shows in the opening season which, without the new Marlowe, we simply would not have been able to stage.

"The old theatre could seat about 950. The new one will be 1,200. What we've noticed as a result is a rise in the attention level we are commanding from theatre productions both at home and abroad."

A star-studded Gala Opening is due to take place on October 4,

Find more news updated daily online www.yourcanterbury.co.uk although Mr Everett remained tightlipped over who will be performing.

The theatre's opening weekend will see two days of family fun on October 8-9, before the serious business of major productions get under way.

In addition to the main auditorium there will be the Marlowe Studio, which will seat about 150 and host a variety of smaller performances and exhibitions. Among the first shows unveiled this week were Alan Bennett's royal The drama Madness of George the Northern Ballet's The Nutcracker, and Top Hat – a lavish new version of the classic Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers movie from the 1930s.

It will be performed at the theatre as it prepares for what it hopes will be a long run in London's

It stars Holby City and Strictly Come Dancing star Tom Chambers, and Hollyoaks actress Summer Strallen.

Mr Everett added: "Not in a million years would be have been able to get this sort of performance before. It is only going to five venues in the UK before the West End and it will be here for two weeks. We're delighted."

But for many it will be the return of the pantomime to the city centre which will provide the biggest cheer.

Cinderella will run from December 2 to January 22 - once again produced by the husband and wife team of Emily Wood and Paul Hendy.

Mr Hendy explained: "The way the seating is arranged in the new theatre will be perfect for pantomime.

"Before it was so difficult to reach those at the back of the venue. Now everyone is that little bit closer."

Tickets for the first shows go on sale to the Friends of the Marlowe on Monday. The 6,500 members will have priority booking for the shows before the general public can snap them up on April 11.

Family tickets to the Game&Equine

THE Kent Game and Equine Festival is one of the first of the great regional game fairs of the year, and is set to return on March 26-27, 2011, at the Kent Showground, Detling.

This event, which is open from 10am to 4pm on both days, is regularly attended by more than 10,000 visitors.

The show is a celebration of countryside life from fishing and shooting to traditional crafts and locally produced food; and with an exciting array of equestrian entertainment and education, the show offers visitors the ultimate countryside experience.

And you can join the crowds for free as we have 10 family tickets – two adults and children – worth £26 each, to be won.

The indoor Supreme Equine Arena will feature international show jumpers Graham and Tina Fletcher, a native stallion parade, and a sports and competition stallion parade together with a fun and fast-paced Pony Club Horse and Hound show.

If your interest is in fishing, then be prepared for a treat, as Britain's most famous fisherman, Charles Jardine will be demonstrating his skills and offering coaching.

Charles has a passion for cooking and based on the 'catch it and cook theme' will be demonstrating a fabulous Fisherman's Lunch – Food fit for Fishers in the Game Cookery theatre.

There will be much on offer for dog lovers, including the British Association for Shooting and Conservation running four gundog scurries, advice from the Gundog Clinic, terrier and lurcher shows, and a dog crèche on site.

The show's other features will include an on-site clay shoot, a shooting school, air-rifle coaching, archery, falconry, racing ferrets, vintage tractors and machinery, and the game cookery theatre.

There will also be a countryside and equestrian shopping village with more than 100 retail outlets.

Discounted advance tickets are available by visiting www.contour.uk.net or calling 01749 813899

Mandarin lessons boost for toddlers

By JILL HURST

jill.hurst@kosmedia.co.uk

CHILDREN as young as two years old are being taught to speak Mandarin at a nursery.

Little Learners, based in Loose, Maidstone, is providing Chinese language tuition to 17 children aged between two and five.

Manager Hayley Oliver said the choice of language was based on the growing need for Chinese speakers from the western world combined with an interesting and vibrant culture.

"China is one of the fastest growing economies in the world and will play a big part in the future lives of our children," she said.

"Many schools offer German, French or Spanish, but we feel Mandarin has a lot to offer

"It's important for children to speak a second language and the younger they start, the easier it is to pick up. At nursery age children's brains are like a sponge, ready to soak everything up."

A native Mandarin speaker visits the nursery for two hours each week, making use of an array of visual props and aids to stimulate the children's interest.

late the children's interest.

Mrs Oliver said: "We use all sorts of visual aids including posters, teddies, books and an abacus to help them to learn to count."

According to Mrs Oliver, most of the children already have the basics including counting to six and saying 'hello' and 'goodbye'.

The nursery has also embraced the Chinese culture, celebrating New Year and the country's zodiac system, which relates each year to an animal.

Mrs Oliver, a former teacher, says the lessons will prove invaluable to the children when they progress through the New Line Learning Academy, which features Mandarin on its teaching syllabus.

China is now home to one of the world's most important economies and more people speak Chinese than any other language in the world.

BV MATHEW BEECH

A PROJECT charting the history of the county is looking for people who remember a curious religious landmark.

The Kent Cultural Baton, which has been travelling through Kent, is heading to Gillingham and is looking for residents who remember Jezreel's Tower.

The building, which stood on the A2 at Chatham Hill, is the latest focus for the project, which has been recording stories as part of the cultural celebrations in the build-up to the 2012 Olympics.

Residents who remember the landmark building are invited to visit Gillingham Pier for the Party on the Pier celebrations this Saturday, to share their memories

The Kent Cultural Baton is working with artist Simon Barker, who is making a film about the cubic temple built in 1885.

The building was being used as a storage facility for the Co-Operative when it was demolished in 1961, and the last remaining building associated with Jezreel's Tower, in Canterbury Street, was razed to the ground in late 2008.

Jezreel's Tower was built by James Jershom Jezreel, formally known as James

Roland White. He joined and took over a small branch of the Christian Israelites religious sect in 1814.

Once he had completed his military service in 1881, White, now using the name Jezreel, decided his church needed a headquarters and a temple, which was to be built on Chatham Hill - the area's highest point.

The design was inspired by Revelation XXI, 16: "And the city lieth foursquare, and the length thereof is as great as the breadth the length and the breadth and the height thereof are equal."

Inspired by this, Jezreel wanted to create a perfect cube, with sides 144ft long, but was persuaded by architects to create the building with a 124ft square base and a height of

The tower was finished with yellow bricks and eight castellated towers

Engraved on to the outside of the tower were a trumpet and flying roll, crossed swords of the spirit and the Prince of Wales feathers, representing the Trinity.

The architectural oddity is one of 26 landmark buildings featured in a new book examining British eccentricity, David McKie's Bright Particular Stars: A Gallery of Glorious British Eccentrics

Following Jezreel's death in 1885, his wife took over control of the sect and the building project, but this came to an end in 1888, when she also died. The unfinished building was put up for sale in 1897 and failed to find a buyer for six years.

Members of the Jezreelites continued to rent parts of the building, but in 1905, they fell behind with the rent and the tower's owners repossessed it.

The holding company began the demolition of the tower in this year, but when the contractors went bankrupt, the tower remained derelict until 1961, when it was demolished

NHS doctors, nurses, managers and other health professionals in east Kent have been awarded a certificate naming them trust of the year.

Dr Foster, which provides an annual guide to hospitals, found East Kent Hospitals University NHS Foundation Trust the best performing nationally.

The organisation measures healthcare across a range of areas that are important to patients on behalf of the Government.

These include quality of life for people with long-term conditions, preventing premature death, helping people recover, a positive experience of care and a safe environment.

EKHT, which runs hospitals including the William Harvey in Ashford, the QEQM in Margate, and the Kent and Canterbury, was named trust of the year 2010.

Chairman Nicholas Wells said: "Being named the best performing trust in the country is a great accolade for our staff although we must not become complacent, but push the boundaries of patient care at all times.

Sink over sludge plant

A PETITION opposing plans for a waste treatment plant has been signed by almost everyone in a village, writes Mathew Beech.

A staggering 96 per cent of those living in Sellindge have put their name to the petition calling for plans for a recycling facility proposed by the Country Style Group.

It includes an anaerobic digestion plant, which breaks waste down into a sludge. The gases can be used for energy, and the sludge is then spread on fields as a 'soil improver'.

Kent County Council's councillor Susan Carey was presented with the petition against the plant proposed for the Otterpool Quarry site, outside Ashford, just off the A20 and close to the Airport Café. Cllr Carey said: "I want this matter to be settled, because it has been a blight over the village for three years. I blame Country Style for this, because they have persisted with this application in the face of strong opposition from the village.'

to 95,000 tonnes of commercial waste from Ashford, Dover and Shepway, with more than 160 lorries visiting the site daily.

Chairman of the Sellindge and District
Residents' Association, Ronald Lello, said:
"More than 96 per cent of the villagers have signed the petition and it expresses how strongly we feel about the plant being situated right in the middle of the countryside."

The three-year dispute has put pressure on the owners of the Airport Café.

Julie Green said: "This has been a café since 1932 and it has been in the family since 1957. I've put everything into it and for that to be taken away would be heartbreaking."

The planning application for the site is likely to be heard at County Hall in Maidstone on Tuesday, March 15.

Post Office staff vote for strike

POST Office clerks have voted to go on strike in a dispute over pay and job security, writes Steve Knight.

The industrial action, which could take place this month, affects about 100 Kent counter staff in Crown branches as opposed to privately-run sub-post offices or franchises such as WH Smith.

About 95 per cent of the county's workers voted in favour of going on strike when they were balloted by the Communication Workers' Union last week.

The union says members have been denied a pay rise for the third year running, despite increased profits at Post Office Ltd (POL) of £72 million last year, with managers winning a 2.25 per cent raise and directors an extra 21 per cent in pay and benefits.

"POL is showing callous indifference to the work and living standards of hard-working counter staff," said CWU represen-tative for Kent, Mole Meade.

"I'm optimistic we won't have to go ahead with the strike. It would be foolhardy to not get back round the table and discuss a meaningful pay rise for people who haven't had one for three years.

Guarantee

The Kent counter staff were among 4,000 CWU members across 373 offices nationwide who were asked to vote for or against industrial action. The union claims POL is also refusing to extend a guarantee on the number of Crown offices – which provide a full range of services including tax discs and passports – which it says implies further closures are planned.

CWU deputy general secretary Dave Ward said: "This is about more than pay. The job security of members and future of the Crown office network is also at stake.

"We want a strong network of Crown offices, but the Government and the company appear to be hiding the fact that they are planning a programme of further closures.
"Given the lack of support from Government, we fear for the future of the

According to POL, the Crown office network is losing £55 million a year and cannot afford to offer counter staff a pay rise.

A spokesman said: "Post Office is disappointed that staff have voted in favour of strike action.

"Ninety-seven per cent of Post Offices are run by sub-postmasters and will be unaffected by any industrial action.

"Deliveries are also unaffected by this ballot result."

Chimney warning

THE cold snap has seen an increase in chimney fires as residents turn to open fires and wood-burning stoves.

Firefighters issued safety advice, urging people to ensure chimneys are swept to prevent a build-up of soot and residue.

Crews attended 13 chimney fires throughout the county in the last week. Blazes broke out in Pembury, Sissinghurst, Paddock Wood, Edenbridge, Headcorn and Langton Green.

A fire service official said: "It has been a long, cold winter and we urge those with open fires and wood-burning stoves to get chimneys swept and flues checked."

There were also fires in Ashford, East Malling and Upnor. In the east of the county, firefighters attended calls in Westgate, Sandgate, Whitstable and Ramsgate.

MILLIONS of bugs will help make the River Medway cleaner than ever. The bugs are part of an upgrade at Ham Hill wastewater treatment works in Snodland, and eat away at contaminants, such as ammonia.

The bugs grow inside 22-metre diameter tanks, which the wastewater trickles through during the final treatment stage.

About 12 million litres of wastewater flow through Ham Hill treatment works each day in dry weather, rising to 30 million litres a day in wet weather.

THE DEVASTATED family of a man killed by a single punch, say they know the identity of his killer and have appealed to the community to help bring him to justice.

Police fear it is only a matter of time before the "violent thug" hurts someone again. However, frustrated officers do not have enough evidence make a charge.

Adrian Milner, 48, was punched in the face as he left the New Inn pub and headed home with friend Michael Coomber along Church Road, Murston, just before 8pm on Tuesday, December 28, 2010.

The force of the punch caused him to fall to the floor and he hit the back of his head. He was taken to a neurological hospital in London, but doctors were unable to save the father of two. He died on Sunday, January 9. Andy Clarke was Mr Milner's best friend for more than 40 years. He said: "We know who did this and we are absolutely positive people close to the person responsible know he did it.

"We appeal to them to come forward before he does it again. Please help us to find some sort of closure and see justice done.

Mr Milner's family, including partner Gemma Stuttard, are still struggling to come to terms with what has happened.

Speaking to Adrian's killer, Gemma pleaded: "Do the right thing and hand yourself in."

And to those who may have information she added: "No matter how small or irrelevant you may think the information is, please come forward."

Gemma was set to marry Mr Milner, but must now accept this will never happen.

She said: "Someone has played God. It was a random attack and until whoever did this is caught, we will never know exactly what happened.

School trips 'at risk from cuts'

By MARIJKE COX

marijke.cox@kosmedia.co.uk

ENGLISH Heritage has launched a Save our School Trips campaign, to stop the ailing tradition becoming another casualty of the downturn.

It follows a 14 per cent drop in the number of class excursions to Kent's historic sites over the last four years, caused by schools being unable to justify transport costs, and teachers' concerns over the "risk assessment culture"

According to research by English Heritage, 94 per cent of teachers support school trips as a valuable tool to enrich topics covered in the classroom, but three quarters see transport expenses as one of the main obstacles.

This could mean a generation of children missing out on the memorable experience of excursions and the knowledge they bring.

In a bid to save the age-old school trip English Heritage is offering 50 per cent towards transport costs to one of its historic sites in Kent, for the first three learning groups to book a visit.

The offer includes Dover, Deal and Walmer castles; Down House - the home of Charles Darwin - near Orpington; and one of the country's most important Roman villas, at Lullingstone, near Dartford.

Fran Lashmar, English Heritage education manager for the South East, said she believed missing out on school trips would have a negative effect on education.

This isn't just in history, but art, drama, geography and across the whole curriculum," she said.

"Ninety per cent of us will remember more through active learning; it allows students of all abilities to put their studies into context in a way simply not possible in the classroom.

"Our heritage is for everyone, and we see offering schools free access to our sites as the way to break down stereotypical barriers for those students who would not normally have the opportunity to visit.

For some children, this is the only chance they have to see these places where their families don't see visiting a monument as a first priority.

English Heritage offers full support for teachers on educational visits, with free resources on the group's website as well as free access to the sites.

Funding cuts

Ms Lashmar said with the new campaign some schools will now also be able to save money on transport costs, which can often reach hundreds of pounds.

"Teachers and schools are under so much oressure," she said. "They lost the Building Schools for the Future funding and there are other cuts being made through back door.
"The risk assessment culture we have now also makes it harder?

To be in with a chance of receiving 50 per cent towards transport costs for an educational visit, go to www.services.english-heritage.org.uk/educationbookings and quote the code SOST March 2011.

The deadline for applications is Friday, March 18.

POLICE are appealing for witnesses after a woman in her 30s was killed on the M20.

The woman was on the carriageway and died after she was hit by a passing

It is not yet clear how the woman came to be on the motorway.

Kent Police's Serious Collision

Investigation Unit is continuing to appeal for witnesses following the incident that took place at about 8.20pm on Sunday, just south of junction 10 at Ashford.

All three lanes were closed between junction 10 and 11 while investigators were at the scene. The motorway was re-opened at about 7am on Monday.

Sunlight sparks blaze at home

A DOG and cat had to be rescued from a burning building after a bizarre blaze was sparked in Gillingham.

Fire crews sent to put out the flames on Monday afternoon believe it was started when sunlight reflected by a vanity mirror caused clothing to catch light.

Two engines from Medway Fire Station were sent to tackle the incident at about 2.15pm after neighbours heard a smoke alarm and saw smoke coming from the house.

Crews tackle the blaze in a first-floor bedroom and rescued the pets from the property. The fire was extinguished within half an hour, damaging to 20 per cent of the room.

Crew manager Nina Batsford said: "It appears that sun through the window had been reflected on to clothing and caused a fire. Fortunately the smoke alarm alerted neighbours so we were able to prevent major damage.

"It's a good reminder to people to think carefully about where they place mirrors.

Call to tackle HGV blind spot dangers

By MARIJKE COX

marijke.cox@kosmedia.co.uk

A CAMPAIGN aimed at reducing the number of crashes caused by HGVs has received strong backing from Europe.

Some 323 MEPs signed a declaration calling on the European Commission to review old laws they claim fail to tackle problems with lorry drivers' blind spots, which has led to hundreds of fatalities on the roads.

It comes in response to the national Save Me See Me campaign, which was launched by the family of 30-year-old Eilidh Cairns, who was killed in 2009 after being hit by a lorry in London on her way to work.

The campaign is pushing for mandatory cameras and sensors to be placed on lorries to improve drivers' visibility.

Kent MEP Peter Skinner has thrown his weight behind the campaign, stressing the problem in the county was particularly bad, especially around ports and areas with a large number of cyclists.

He said: "This excellent campaign heightens the pressure on law-makers in Brussels to look again at how we can prevent these needless tragedies.

"By fitting lorries with sensors, cameras and better brakes, cyclists and pedestrians will become more visible and drivers will be able to react more quickly in an emergency.

"The majority of lorry drivers want to be as safe as possible. Blind spots not only affect the safety of other road users, but their safety as well. When it comes to saving lives, making the streets safer for all road users must be a top priority."

Thousands of lorries travel on Kent's roads every day, particularly on the M20 and M2, with the Port of Dover handling 1.8 million every year.

Two years ago, 58-year-old Pierre Foulkes.

TRAGEDIES: Cyclists Eilidh Cairns (left) and Pierre Foulkes (right) may have been saved if lorries had been fitted with cameras and sensors a port worker from Deal, was killed outside the eastern docks in a collision with an HGV while on his bicycle.

The same year a two-year-old boy was seriously injured when his buggy was struck by a lorry in St Peter's Road, Margate.

His sister, aged eight, and 58-year-old grandmother were also injured.

An investigation is also under way into the death of a female driver in a collision involving a lorry in Cranbrook last month.

Kate Cairns, the sister of Eilidh, said if measures such as cameras and sensors were compulsory there would be a reduction in the number of fatalities. "This isn't just a local problem, this is an international problem, but a simple thing such as installing cameras would help," she said.

"Eilidh was familiar with her route to work and an experienced and strong cyclist. But there was an incident and she [still] ended up under the wheels of a truck.

"These trucks are lethal to. The drivers are isolated in their cabs with massive blind spots all around them, not just on the left-hand side. "These cameras are essential – they would feed information to the driver automatically."

Miss Cairns said she believed had the cameras been in place in her sister's case there may have been a different outcome.

Mr Skinner added: "The issue of HGV blind

Mr Skinner added: "The issue of HGV blind spots is particularly important to many people living in the South East."

LETTER OF THE WEEK

Sickened by free lunches

I was incensed to read that Kent's county councillors had voted to retain their free lunches during full council meetings, at a cost of £12.50 a head.

This costs a total of £1,050 for each meeting, or £7,350 for the seven meetings held in a year. They say the freebies are crucial to the "social atmosphere" of their meetings. This is at a time when they will be making budget cuts of millions of pounds and axing 1,500 jobs.

I find it disgusting that they feel they are justified in spending an amount on seven days' lunches. That is more than a lot of pensioners have to live on for a year.

To say that it is crucial to the social atmosphere is an insult to council taxpayers. We are not paying for them to socialise, but to provide good services for the best value. The story also says councillors already get an allowance to cover meals, so surely they should pay for their own lunches out of that.

Party to show Kentish pride

The day of the royal wedding, April 29, is a public holiday and there will be no school that day.

The weather should be warm enough for street celebrations.

This is a once-in-a-generation event. The entire length of Kent's pedestrianised streets should be given over to parties.

It will be fun for the children, but also a wonderful opportunity to publicise tourist sites, attract visitors and sell goods on the day. We could get children up to the age of 13 seated, and older children can serve the younger ones. For this to work, there will need to be sponsors to donate food and drinks; organisations to lend chairs and tables; volunteers to organise; buses to be diverted; parking to be laid on.

All local politicans and organisations should pull together on this one. Get a street party licence and forge ahead with it.

Let's show the country what Kent can do. As a boy who waved a Union flag at the Queen on Coronation Day, I would like this very much. Geoffrey Clark, secretary Ukip, Dartford and Gravesham

Charity should begin at home

When will our leaders face up to the fact that with all the cuts we are having to endure we will soon be poorer than the countries we give foreign aid to.

It's about time somebody in the Government realised that if we stopped foreign aid for a year Britain would be out of debt. Why do we have to suffer? Surely looking after one's own country should be the first priority? I don't think anybody could argue against that.

John R O'Neon, by email OPINION: BUOYED BY THE FIGHTBACK

UK Independence Party leader NIGEL FARAGE says EU fishing policy is still dead in the water, despite the promised changes on scandalous 'discards'

NE of the greatest betrayals on joining the EEC in 1973 was towards the British fishing industry. Our fishermen, over the years, have have had to cope with a quota system arbitrarily imposed by Brussels in the name of 'conservation'.

The European Union's own estimate is that 40 per cent of all fish caught is dumped - dead back into the sea. Over a million tonnes a year of fish wasted, while across the world we have starvation and in this country we have a fishing industry on the brink of destruction.

From a traditional, buoyant and healthy industry managing some of the richest fishing grounds in the world, UK fishing and associated industries have been devastated by the EU's Common Fisheries Policy; its fishing fleets deliberately and methodically destroyed, its ports and related support structures turned into ghost ports, with British coastal waters now just part of the 'common' waters. We can map this decline in Kent with our own once-thriving fishing towns of Dover, Folkestone, Dungeness and Ramsgate among the many whose townsfolk relied on the sea.

British fishermen numbered in the tens of thousands in the 1960s, but by 2007 the UK only had 13,000 left. This has continued to decline. On top of this, the policy has added £200 a year to the family food bill which, at a time of cuts and austerity, is shameful.

Even the European Commission admits the CFP has failed. Eighty-eight per cent of fish stocks are overfished, while 30 per cent are outside safe biological limits, meaning they cannot reproduce as normal.

Following the Hugh's Fish Fight campaign by TV chef Hugh Fearnley-Whittingstall, aimed at ending 'discards', the EC called a meeting of fisheries ministers to announce a series of changes. I attended this meeting to listen to the proposals on a topic on which I have been campaigning for more than a decade. Before the meeting, the British minister, Richard Benyon, told me he assumed we'd be on the same side. I had to disagree – I don't think it is the place of a Greek politician, fisheries commissioner Maria Damanaki, to make laws on our national resources

Every year, rounds of horse-trading take place in Brussels to decide fishing quotas. These are being reduced year-on-year, resulting in a situation where some fishermen, particularly those who operate smaller boats, cannot make a living.
Of course I'm delighted that after 28 years we may see an end to discards. The fact that we have been throwing millions of tonnes of fish back into the sea is an outrage. As one of the million anglers in the UK, I have been appalled at not only the impact on the environment but on our fishing industry and the damage wreaked on it by civil servants ignorant of this way of life. But for those who think this change will be a quick one, or one which will instantly breathe life into our beleaguered fishing industry, I'm afraid I don't share that confidence.

Hugh himself said that British fishermen will "feel the pinch". This may well have been the case if the industry was thriving, but in 2011 it's almost dead in the water. Rather than this gradual approach to ending discards and quotas, Ukip favours abandoning all quotas and strictly forbidding discards. We should follow the example of the Norwegians, who fish their own waters without discards by managing fishing effort.

Despite all-party criticism of the CFP, Ukip is the only party with the opportunity to restore British fishing to its former glory in a meaningful and practical manner.

The UK is in a prime location for creating some of the finest fishing grounds in Europe, if not the world. If managed correctly, these will last for ever, but I fear it will take more than a celebrity campaign and politicians motivated by spin to take the action needed to ensure we don't sound the final toll for the fishing industry in this country. For Kent, with its rich history, it will breathe new life into our communities.

• Ukip leader Nigel Farage is a South East MEP. He lives in Westerham, near Sevenoaks.

Lecturing on the merits of action

THE threat of strike action by workers from a variety of professions is yet further proof of what a sorry state our economy is in.

Post Office counter staff and lecturers at the University of Kent are the latest to voice their support for industrial action and it's likely the police would join them too, if they were allowed.

And while workers from different professions all have their own reasons for wanting to go on strike, it has become quite clear that money - or rather the lack of it is the root of all evil as far as they are concerned.

In regards to the lecturers in particular, these must be surreal times.

As opposed to when postmen or rubbish collectors go on strike, only a small percentage of the population – students – are actually affected by anything university lecturers do.

Therefore they have little option but to target the very people they have devoted their lives to helping.

It can be easy to criticise union representatives for downing tools when they don't get their own way, but we all have our own reasons for making a stand against things that affect us personally.

There are likely to be many strikes, marches and rallies over the next few months and years, but only time will tell if any of them make a blind bit of difference.

Extra holiday match made in ale heaven

NOT only have we gained an extra bank holiday from the wedding of Prince William and Kate Middleton, we now have a new drink to enjoy as well.

Moodley's Royal Match - described as an elegant and tasteful" beer that reflects the characteristics of the happy couple – will go down well on a warm April afternoon.

But whether anyone will care - or even remember - what they are drinking by the end of the party is something else entirely.

Riposte to your glorified writer

I was dismayed by your Comment regarding supply teachers (March 6).

Supply staff may be expensive to a school, but very few people realise the amount of pay for a supply teacher is based on a regular teacher's annual salary and they would only receive the same amount if they worked every school day.

So far this tax year, I have earned £9,000, having been available for employment every working day.

Supply work is definitely drying up as schools increasingly use unqualified staff to teach children.

How many parents realise their children are being taught by teaching assistants and cover supervisors?

I believe the latter may be the "glorified babysitters" you refer to. I can certainly understand that teaching assistants obviously know the children and the curriculum, but they are not qualified teachers.

Supply teachers, as many pupils and parents do not realise, are fully qualified teachers, who have held permanent teaching positions in schools, sometimes for many years, as in my experience.

"In these tough economic times" as you write, it does not help to denigrate someone who is struggling to make a living and after years of teaching to be called a "glorified babysitter".

Bank on more trouble ahead

Chancellor George Osborne's statement that he is going to set up 10 enterprise zones in the North and the Midlands to stimulate growth is truly an admission that his present economic policies are an abject failure.

Ten zones north of London may just, in part, help those 10 areas but will certainly confine the rest of the country and undoubtedly Folkestone, to recession or even

Here in Folkestone we have had Tory or Lib Dem run councils for decades, but enterprise is the last think they have helped generate. Far from growth, we have had decline upon decline and now in certain wards of the town have rapidly rising joblessness, with 25 per cent youth unemployment on top.

Margaret Thatcher and John Major – with their mace-wielding hero Michael 'Tarzan' Hestletine – set up 38 enterprise zones between 1981 and 1996, yet we still had three million unemployed, 15 per cent inflation and a decimated manufacturing base under the

Mr Osborne is just repeating the same old failed window dressing of the past.

Sure, the Chancellor has stated that we should never again rely upon the banks and financial services to grow the economy, but that in itself flies in the face of his own Governor of the Bank of England, Mervyn King, who on the very same day let the cat out of the bag and warned of a second banking crisis in the UK unless the banks are reformed and stopped from putting profits and bonuses before people and industry.

Something this Government has patently failed to do.

We must though give the Chancellor credit for promising to reform the planning laws in the Entreprise Zones to allow speedier decisions for commerce and industry and to encourage entrepreneurs to invest without the risk of being tied up in lengthy and highly expensive local planning inquiries.

Pity this message did not get through to his colleagues in Cabinet responsible for calling in the Lydd airport planning applica-tion now costing us all millions in legal fees, council tax and lost opportunities.
Then Folkestone and Shepway are never destined to be enterprise zones under a Coalition Government that would rather preserve the district as a retirement zone for the gentlefolk of the Big Society than as an area of growth and prosperity for our children and generations to come.

problems, they start looking to make a name for themselves abroad

So the Archbishop of Canterbury ignores his decaying Church and tries to interfere in matters that are not really his concern.

Thanks to the continual dilution of Christ's message, the adoption of pagan teachings and the desire to do man's will rather than God's, Dr Rowan Williams has not only assisted the drift towards a more secular and soon to be Godless society, but presides over a Church which is crumbling beneath him, as his bishops leave for what they think are greener pastures

He should be attending to the spiritual dearth in his Church as his flocks become, "skinned and thrown about like sheep without a shepherd" [Matthew 9:36].

He should be more concerned at his lack of defence of the Christian faith, which is under attack as it has never been before, as more and more Christians are persecuted for their beliefs.

Instead, he does anything other than reinforce Christ's teachings, anything other than teach Biblical truths, anything other than give a spiritual lead in a very spiritually dark world. He is neither one thing or another, and as God said in Revelation 3:15-16, "Because you are lukewarm and neither hot nor cold, I am going to vomit you out of my mouth".

His Church cannot stand. Phil Granger, West Malling

People know best

on EU, Cameron

Just how long can David Cameron ignore the people on the subject of the EU, after telling everyone to listen to the people?

It's quite possible the people of this country are a lot wiser than this government and can see all the disadvantages of belonging to this club, and very few of the benefits.

This country does not belong to Cameron or this government. It belongs to the people they are supposed to represent.

Going to the voting booth to put them in Westminster must be some sort of a joke, as David Cameron is no more than a caretaker passing on the EU rules and regulations.

Since Ted Heath, less and less of this country is being governed by Parliament and more and more by the unelected crowd in Brussels.

Just in case Mr Cameron has not got the message: "We want our country back." It is not down to him alone to decide on such an important issue.

Quite often we see war graves on television and I have to wonder why all those people died for our freedom when someone comes along and sells us down the river. That is an insult to all of those people, and not letting us have a say in staying or leaving the EU is an insult to the whole country.

He promised, amongst the many promises he has broken, some sort of a referendum about Europe, but the only promise he has kept so far is the one he made to Nick Clegg and that is one the country does not want.

investors (almost all public sector) in a misguided attempt to boost business at Manston by subsidising flights to Virginia. In months, £200,000 was lost almost all of it public money. KCC also invested in the previous owner of Manston, Planestation, and lost that public money too, when the company went into liquidation.

The Audit Commission criticised KCC for its ill-considered attempt to boost Manston by using public funds.

This current bid would be a classic case of throwing more public money away.

Market economics suggest that, if a commercial airline operator has to be subsidised to be tempted to fly from Manston, the route is not commercially viable without a subsidy. Airline operators are not daft - they fight for the routes that will make money and shun the rest. Manston has been in commercial ownership for 11 years and still has just two passenger flights a day. A rail station at Thanet Parkway will make only a very marginal difference to the airport's accessibility and will not be enough to turn this loss-making business into a thriving regional airport

Local people fear the grand plan is to build Thanet Parkway rail station in the middle of nowhere and then close Ramsgate rail station (and possibly two others) so that people who want to travel by train to London have to drive to a station rather than walk, as they do now. This is a retrograde step when we are supposed to be cutting emissions.

An unsuccessful Thanet Parkway station would lend itself to becoming another out-of-town shopping centre. In an era when we're worried about the UK's food security, this would be a poor swap for prime Kent farmland.

KCC has already said in its Local Transport Plan that it is not viable in the current economic climate to speed up the rail line from Thanet to London. If this is the case, then investing millions exploring Thanet Parkway is a complete waste of money, as KCC cannot afford to see the project through in the next five

What I would like to know - will KCC's past investment failures be taken into account when this £10m is considered? Carole Russell, Ramsgate believes if you repeat anything enough times, it must make it true.

The latest is that recent flooding provides conclusive irrefutable proof of man-made global warming. Never mind that flooding occurred before the Industrial Revolution, before the world was so overpopulated and even covered the whole earth during the time of Noah, thousands of years ago.

The main contribution we have made to flooding is the concreting and asphalting over of vast areas of land that once used to soak up the rain. Now it stays on the surface, accumulates and floods housing. So once again in this argument we are back to the real problem of overpopulation. Phil Granger, West Malling

Animal lovers can play a vital role We're calling on readers to lend a hand at the RSPCA. The Kent West, Ashford and Dover, branches are searching for the volunteer stars of the future to help out with tasks, which go much further than dog walking and cat cuddling.

We are looking for people who can help out with all aspects of the charity's operation at a local level ranging from fundraising, assisting in the shops and customer service and having a say in key decisions as a branch trustee.

We hope that these opportunities will benefit the volunteers as well. Many of the tasks we need help with could help people struggling to find work to gain employment, or give school leavers and recent graduates that all-important work experience.

The RSPCA is a charity and receives no Government funding. It relies on members of the public to continue encouraging kindness and preventing cruelty to animals.

Experience is not necessary for many of the tasks, so whatever your forte, there should be something for you.

If your readers are interested in getting involved, they can contact the RSPCA enquiries team on 0300 1234 555, log on to www.rspca.org.uk or contact their local branch.

Liz Sheppee, branch operations manager, RSPCA

Check the rules on campaigning

On Thursday, May 5, voters will decide who represents them in local elections across England. There will also be a referendum on whether we use the 'first past the post' or 'alternative vote' system to elect MPs to the UK Parliament. Many of your readers will want to get involved in campaigning in the referendum and elections.

This could be by setting up a campaign group, standing as a candidate or starting a political party.

Anyone who wants to get involved should be aware that there are rules. These are set out at ww.electoralcommission.org.uk/guidance and I'd encourage everyone hoping to play an active role in the campaigns to check the rules.

Tom gets to the chapel on time

Stand-up shares the bright lights of his Vegas wedding

BY NICK AMES

COMIC Tom Wrigglesworth is set to appear at Canterbury's Gulbenkian Theatre as part of his nationwide Nightmare Dream Wedding Tour.

It recounts the story of a recent trip to Las Vegas, involving a chat-show host with delusions of vast grandeur, a hypnotic hotel guest, currency-based disasters, wrong identities and last-minute wedding plans.

So it's nothing new to a man who once stepped in to help an elderly lady in distress - and found himself accused of begging as the police were called

"I got married in Vegas and it was really spontaneous, which was what me and Lu Lu, my wife, wanted," he said. "We were staying at the Golden Nugget, which is an older place, downtown, not on the strip, and it had been a very sudden decision to go. We decided three or four days earlier and then just left.

"We got married in the Little White Chapel along the strip and the woman there went through all these celebrities who'd done the same -Frank Sinatra was one, Britney Spears another. But it was all so quick that I didn't catch that many other names.

"She asked us if we were English and when we said yes she told us Jack and Vera Duckworth had been married there in an episode of Coronation Street.

"The show focuses on how I almost didn't get to the church on time. Some of it I have made up - but some is shudderingly accurate.

"It's got a good reception and it's better than it was when I first did it in Edinburgh. It wasn't really ready then, but now it has been knocked into shape."

Wrigglesworth said he really enjoyed his time in Las Vegas - despite coming out on the wrong side when it came to gambling.

"I loved it and had a real hoot there," he said. "I'm totally aware that it is fake, but it has a shameless quality to it which I like. I think the key to it all is not to take it seriously.

"I'm a fair poker-player, but I didn't win at the tables. In fact I don't think I was ever ahead."

The Yorkshireman won the comedy newcomer award So You Think You're Funny? at the 2003 Edinburgh Festival Fringe.

In 2006 he performed with fellow comedian Tom Allen as a part of the show Allen And Wrigglesworth. In 2009 he was nominated for the main Edinburgh Comedy Award. He presented Radio 7's Comedy Club in 2010.

This year he had his own series of four programmes broadcast on BBC Radio 4 entitled Tom Wrigglesworth's Open Letters; it was placed in the 6.30pm slot on Thursdays.

This is based around four comic exchanges of letters with bureaucrats and corporate jobsworths. "Does anyone like them?" asked Wrigglesworth.

"I do like radio," he said. "The TV I have done has tended to be bits and bobs, five- or 10-minute slots, whereas the radio can be half an hour of me. I'm a lot more in charge.

He hit the headlines recently when coming to the aid of a pensioner on Lena Ainscow, 75, was left in tears when she was ordered to pay £115 for a new ticket to London.

fellow Wrigglesworth stepped in to organise a whipround to help her - but a guard said his actions were equivalent to begging and warned that the police would be called in.

The incident happened after Mrs Ainscow had set out from her home in Bolton on a trip via Manchester and London to see her daughter Carol Battersby, who lives in Bromley. Mrs Ainscow had bought an £11.50 pre-booked ticket for the 10.45am Virgin service from Manchester to Euston.

But her travel itinerary stated that she was booked on the 10.15am service and when she asked staff what she should do about the error they told her to board the earlier train.

However, when her ticket was inspected, she was told it was invalid and she must buy a new one. "When the guard said I had to buy a new ticket I was devastated," she said just after the event. "The only money I had was the savings I'd scraped together to get my grandchildren a present.

Wrigglesworth said: "I couldn't sit there and let this helpless woman deal with it on her own. I got a paper bag from the buffet car and told the other passengers that if we all gave 50p or £1 we would get the money in no time.

"Everyone was happy to help and someone even put in £30."

The ticket was bought and paid for, but when Wrigglesworth got off the train at Euston he was met by transport police officers.

He said: "Thankfully, a couple of the other passengers helped to explain. Once the police had been put in the picture, they walked away previous tour.

The incident was the spark for Wrigglesworth's

"Funnily enough, I was sitting there thinking shall I do something or not, when it happened," he said. "In the end I did something and am very thankful that I did. It has certainly helped my career.

"And it has also got Virgin to change their policies which were previously so inflexible. So that is good

Johnson brought to life

A PLAY about the 18th century's most famous man of letters, Samuel Johnson, is to be staged at Eastwell Manor near Ashford.

A Dish Of Tea With Doctor Johnson is a two-hander starring Russell Barr and Ian Redford.

Samuel Johnson, born in 1709, was one of England's best-known literary figures. He was a poet, essayist, biographer and literary critic who wrote the first English-language dictionary, published in 1756.

The play has been adapted by Russell Barr, Ian Redford and the former director of the Royal Court Theatre, Max Stafford-Clark from Boswell's A Life Of Doctor Johnson and A Journal Of A Tour Of The Hebrides.

The evening of anecdotes and witty conversation brings to life one of literature's most colourful figures.

The actors will be joined by a Jack

Russell terrier called Katie, who will be playing Dr Johnson's cat, Hodge.

The play is being staged on Friday and Saturday, March 18-19.
On Friday morning, drama students will have an opportunity to attend a workshop with StaffordClark about rehearsal techniques and research into productions.

For the full programme of events involving the Out Of Joint Theatre Company at Eastwell Manor, including ticket prices, visit the website www.eastwellmanor.co.uk.

Hear a musical legend live

From The Animals' House Of

The Rising Sun to his quirky take on Randy Newman's Simon Smith And His Amazing Dancing Bear to his many hits with Georgie Fame, including the most famous, Rosetta, Price is recognised as a musical legend.

His induction into the Rock And Roll Hall Of Fame in 1994 was testimony to his achievements throughout his career in the music industry.

He also won a BAFTA award for the soundtrack of acclaimed film O Lucky Man!, in which he also appeared.

He continues to write, record and perform regularly around the world and is acknowledged as one of the most talented and enduring musical artists to have emerged from the 60s British-beat boom.

He will be appearing at the Gulbenkian Theatre in Canterbury on Thursday (March 17) at 7.45pm.

Tickets are £18.50, or £16.50 for Encore! Gulbenkian members.

Talents at The Tower

MARCH sees The Tower Theatre in Folkestone play host to The Best Of British Jazz, a month of evenings dedicated to celebrated jazz musicians.

Hastings's own infant prodigy Liane Carroll (who started playing the piano aged three) will take to the stage on Thursday (March 17).

A regular at Ronnie Scott's Soho jazz club, the only artist ever to receive two BBC jazz awards in the same year will be play her debut at The Tower.

The Glastonbury headliner's venture into drum and bass has also proved successful as she toured New Zealand and Brazil with outfit London Elektricity.

But spectators can expect to hear a more traditional offering from a selection from albums such as Billy No Mates, Slow Down and Standard Issue, which won Carroll the Marston Pedigree Jazz Award.

A collaborator on Standard Issue, Bobby Wellins, above right, arguably the UK's bestloved tenor sax, will play the Tower on Thursday, March 24. Wellins has already graced the covers of two UK jazz magazines in recent weeks and will end the month on a high, treating the audience to his rich melodies.

Magical Madeira

By Debbie Murray

NOT many weeks had passed since devastating floods produced torrents of rain gushing down from the mountains when we arrived in Funchal, the capital and port of Madeira.

Gardens and tree-lined promenades looked as immaculate as ever, and the only evidence of the floods was the remains of a collapsed bridge in the village of Ribeira Brava, which is perhaps down to the fierce civic pride of this Portugal-owned island.

Madeira is a visual feast – a dramatic combination of awe-inspiring mountains and hidden valleys formed 20 million years ago from a volcanic eruption.

A mild climate and year-round sunshine ensure the land is covered in a carpet of lush green trees, plants and flowers. The Garden Island, as it's known, is nearer to Africa than Portugal, and only 36 miles long and 14 miles wide Steep in Madeira really does mean steep.

The tour bus got me most of the way up Pico Areerio, Madeira's third-highest mountain, but I was still gasping for breath as I took in the spectacular view. It felt as if we were standing on top of the world.

At the Villa Porto Mare Resort, our fourstar hotel in the centre of Funchal, the sunlounger beckoned. Surrounded by manicured gardens and with the scent of beautiful flowers wafting on the breeze, this was the perfect place to do nothing.

For the more active, the resort also offers indoor and outdoor pools, and there's a choice of four restaurants and bars. There's also a handy free bus into the city centre.

The only flatness among Madeira's peaks is in the west of the island, at Paul de Serra, a plateau and perhaps the only place where you see cows grazing. Other cows on the island are housed in individual sheds to stop them falling down the steep terraces.

Locals use these terraces to make a living growing vegetables: sweet potatoes and cabbages, with banana plants bursting with bunches. There are also hundreds of grape vines, for the famous Madeira fortified wine.

Funchal itself has a genteel and stately air, its streets gathered around the small but magnificent Se cathedral, a 15thcentury whitewashed building with a beautiful interior. A fantastic seafront prome-nade stretches the length of the bay. At the west end is the harbour and marina, while the rest is dotted with cafés and bars, ideal for coffee, cake, beer or people-watching.

Nearer sea level, the views continue to amaze. Funchal sits like an amphitheatre on the south of the island, its terracotta roof tiles a quilt of colour. Hotels line the front row, while villas and apartments further back house half of the 250,000 islanders.

In the east, the old town is characterised by narrow cobbled streets, small squares and markets, surrounded by terraced fishermen's cottages, where early settlers once lived. Here, there's a better view of Funchal, by taking a cable car from the seafront high above the city to the hills further inland.

Dramatic

The car stops at the hill-top town of Monte, home to the beautiful Church of Our Lady, which sits in a dramatic position on top of a hill and is accessed only by climbing tens of steps. It's worth the effort, though, especially if you plan to travel back downhill the traditional way... by toboggan.

Goods used to be carried up the hills by horse-drawn toboggans, but this has been adapted for tourists and is a lot of fun. If, like Winston Churchill, you want to capture the views on canvas, head west to Camara de Lobos, where brightly-coloured fishing boats bob about in the shadow of the cliffs. This view inspired the great man to set up his easel and paint palette back in 1950.

Churchill's favourite spot was the famous Reid's Palace Hotel; built on a prominent corner of the headland in Funchal in 1891, it still maintains a colonial grandeur.

But you can stay much more cheaply on Madeira and still enjoy its delights – a marvellously relaxed way of life and the sense that, out in the middle of the Atlantic, you can safely ignore the rest of the world.

Limehouse Thai offers a sizzling taste of summer

HAVING previously taken my housemate to a truly dire Thai restaurant, for this review I felt it only fair we go somewhere at the other end of the quality scale, Limehouse Thai.

Located on Rochester high street, our first experience with the restaurant was the nightmare of parking, but fortunately our luck was in and we only had to walk about 100 yards to get to the lights of our destination, where our table was booked for 8pm.

On arrival we were informed that our table wasn't quite ready yet and ushered downstairs to the bar to peruse the menu over a couple of mango juices.

The menu offered the usual mix of Thai curries, along with a varied selection of dishes that neither of us had heard of. So, just to be imaginative, we both went for our old favourites from the starter menu.

I chose tom yum goong soup (£4.95). This hot-and-sour prawn soup had wimpy old me hiccuping over the spiciness but was simply delicious. At the time I believe I used much higher praise in my description, but as this met with a withering look from my housemate – who liked it but not quite that much – I thought I'd tone down my praise here.

She went for her usual tempura pak (£4.15) of deep-fried vegetables with a sweet-chilli dipping sauce. The plate was soon cleared, but she did feel the portion was a little on the large side for leaving room for the main course.

This time I decided to try something different and went for goong farang (£7.95), a sizzling platter of king prawns and asparagus in oyster sauce. It is not the asparagus season, but to me this dish was quite simply summer on a plate.

As a vegetarian, my housemate decided to go for something a little more unusual and so chose pad mamaung jay (£5.75), stir-fried tofu with cashew nuts. What to me looked like stirfried sponge was to her a tasty and flavorsome sauce, and spicy aubergine with fresh chilli and basil leaves (£4.95). The latter had a delicious tang of garlic and was a favourite with the housemate. Personally, I preferred the mixed veg, a much lighter dish which did not compete with my main.

We couldn't agree on a vegetable side, so we ended up choosing two dishes: pad pak (£4.95), stir-fried mixed vegetables in soya

Then we also shared a bowl of coconut rice (£2.25), again a tasty dish, with just the right balance of flavour.

Unable to quite cram everything in, we asked the waitress to package up our leftovers to take home with us before casting our eye over the dessert menu.

Feeling rather full, we decided to share a taco (£3.50) – what looked to be a traditional Thai dessert. This comprised a coconut custard with water chestnuts served in pandanus leaves; it looked, well, odd. We were served with four small squares of what struck me as being the Thai equivalent of jelly and custard - the white coconut set on top of what seemed, to my uncultured eye, to be a green jelly but which was more salt than sweet.

We struggled to decide if we liked it but did devour most of the dish before deciding we'd eaten too much and instead relaxed at our table with a coffee and a jasmine tea.

The restaurant was packed during our visit, but the tables were spaced far enough apart so that we didn't feel overcrowded.

It did meant we only saw the waiting staff when being served, but as we were perfectly happy with our meal that was not a problem

I absolutely loved the meal, while my housemate enjoyed it but with a little more reserve. The final bill was £48.70.

Limehouse Thai, or its sister establishment the takeaway Grandma Thai, is definitely a place to which we will return.

Train & Retrain & KENTADULT EDUCATION

Inspiring project is setting the stage for musical youth

A YOUTH training project aimed at inspiring young people through music is staging monthly gigs in Maidstone.

Training Them Live (TTL) is a not-forprofit organisation dedicated to providing its clients with the life skills required to aid their transition into further education and employment.

Last month it staged its first gig at the Babylon Live Lounge in King Street, Maidstone, with future shows planned for the first Sunday of every month.

TTL chairman Chris Ellen said: "Our project has been running for the last six years and is strongly supported by Medway Council, Kent Police, and local businesses and business partnerships.

"Training Them Live provides a youth engagement strategy through its music projects, which helps give bored youngsters places to go and keeps them out of harm's way. We are also able to provide them with valuable life-skill building blocks which help to support them in further education and employment.'

Among the skills taught to youths involved in the project include how to work both on stage and in the studio, and how to improve with their instruments of choice. Money raised from the gigs is donated to the Sittingbourne-based charity Demelza Hospice Care for Children.

Babylon Live Lounge owner Kirit Velani said: "We contacted Training Them Live having heard about their rock schools and the work they do in providing acts and event management for the Under Siege concerts at Rochester Castle.

"We've opened our doors to give musicians a chance to play in a real music venue, using and learning from all of our lighting and sound equipment.'

The Sunday Night Live gigs are held over two floors, each with their own type of music, between 3-10pm on the first Sunday of every month.

Admission is £3 on the door. For more information, visit www.ttlgigs.co.uk.

MidKent College's dedicated training consultancy provides a professional service that is dedicated to the needs of local companies. Training courses can be delivered in-company or in the first class facilities available at the College.

BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT

Shelley's four-day forum

AMBITIOUS: Centre manager Shelley Filippi

A SHOPPING centre manager has won a place on a prestigious four-day retail training course, worth £2,000.

Shelley Filippi, who works for the Cushman & Wakefield real estate firm in Swanley, will join other senior figures at the Oxford Retail Masters Forum, running from March 28-31.

As well as hosting seminars with guest speakers, the course invites attendees to explore such issues as global sourcing, ethical trading, business management and climate change

Shelley said: "As a shopping centre manager, I hope the forum will give me a better understanding of retailers' needs at a higher level.

"I want to expand and advance my career in retail but I know I need to get up to speed with the industry language and trends, and attending the course will help me achieve this.'

The scholarship was joint-funded by Skillsmart Retail, the Sector Skills Council for Retail, and the Retail Trust.

Learning support sessions

KENT Adult Education is running courses for people hoping to enter the field of learning support.

Level one introduction sessions are being offered across the county from next month, with potential students advised to visit www.kent.gov.uk/adulted or call 0845 606

5606 for more information on how to enrol. The organisation is highlighting the story of one of its former learners. Satvinder from Gravesend, who gained recognised literacy and numeracy qualifications with Kent Adult Education so she could land a parttime job at a local school.

Her employers were so impressed with her skills and dedication they promoted her to a teaching assistant role and are currently supporting her full teacher training.

Vauxhall Antara

AS ANY car executive will tell you, moving with the times is key to survival. Market trends and customer buying habits change so often now that the you can't stand still for even a moment.

When it was first launched, Vauxhall's Antara allowed the brand to move into the expanding 'soft-roader' market. The car's chunky looks and smart blend of Vauxhall design added a sense of familiarity to its go (almost) anywhere abilities thanks to the inclusion of all-wheel drive.

Second time around, and the Antara retains its trademark purposeful looks, although there's been a general tidy up fore and aft: new lights, grille. It also gains an electronic parking brake and a new diesel engine in two states of tune plus the option of front-wheel drive. Mechanically these options fit well with the current focus on lower emissions and fuel consumption. A predictable but welcome refining of the car's on-road behaviour also forms part of the update package.

Aside from the on-paper changes, it shouldn't come as a surprise that the Antara is a spacious and accommodating car. What does come as a surprise is that it rivals some full-size SUVs for a general feeling of roominess, despite boasting a similar sized footprint to a conventional family estate.

The Antara's cabin also boasts a more upmarket ambience. The use of quality plastics and contrasting trim materials have done much to boost the car's aesthetic appeal.

There's a school of thought that believes such a policy will help lure customers away from more expensive premium SUVs as some buyers choose to downsize for costsaving reasons. Certainly, the general fit, finish and overall feel of the Antara's revised cabin lends considerable weight to this argument.

Out on the road the Antara corners well with a minimum of body roll and stops with little effort. The car's ride is generally compliant but Vauxhall's engineers have opted for a slightly firm setup to boost driver enjoyment. And, even with big wheels fitted, the Antara copes well with the usual urban hazards.

Normally at this point it would be time to talk about the car's all-wheel drive performance. However, in line with an increasing number of rivals, front-wheel drive is now an option. Predictably this is a great choice for buyers who will never venture away from the security of Tarmac and are relatively undemanding when it comes to towing caravans or trailers. The trade off is a modest improvement in fuel consumption and CO2 emissions from the Antara's 2.2-litre diesel engine.

Effective

For some, though, the attraction of all-wheel drive is easy to justify. In reality the Antara's 'on demand' system offers the best of both worlds anyway. Only working when it's needed, the system is smart, effective and quick to respond, meaning the driver needn't worry too much about changing conditions.

Ordinarily, power is sent to the front wheels, but when a loss of grip is detected that balance can change to as much as 50 per cent to the rear wheels depending on the conditions. Factor in hill descent control and you're all set for that muddy hill ahead.

Of course, none of this would be possible without the new 2.2-litre diesel engine. This Euro 5 specification motor can be had with either 163 or 184 horsepower, with the former also available for front-drive variants.

Aside from power outputs, the engines also boast wallet-friendly economy credentials. The low power unit combines 44.8mpg with a CO2 rating of 167g/km. The high power output delivers 42 8mpg and 175g/km CO2 option delivers 42.8mpg and 175g/km CO2.

Both prove exceptionally quiet and refined on the road and lack the rattly attributes still a feature of some rivals' engines. Acceleration is brisk, especially with the 184 horsepower Antara, and the standard fit six-speed manual gearbox can be swapped for a six-speed auto – both new for the Antara.

Available in two trim levels and packing a considerable amount of standard fit safety and comfort equipment, Vauxhall's revised Antara offers drivers a refined and enjoyable driving experience.

As an alternative to a conventional family car, the five-seat SUV's practical cabin easily accommodated an active lifestyle, while the all-wheel drive element will be the icing on the cake for anyone seeking break away from the beaten track.

Hyundai stuns Geneva

HYUNDAI has confirmed that the D-segment in the motor market popularly known as the Mondeo sector – is dominated increasingly by estate car models.

The ambitious Korean marque did so by using the current Geneva Motor Show for the world premiere of its new D-segment contender (pictured), the i40 and showing it only in estate or 'wagon' – it will arrive in the UK in this format soon, to be followed by a saloon later this year. It's a sharp-suited offering penned by Hyundai's Germanbased design team, reflects the luxury-cum-lifestyle image of the modern estate car as it attempts to beat MPV and crossover models on the market.

It also boasts features unavailable on some rivals, including heated folding rear seats; an auto-defog system; and heated steering wheel.

Hyundai also showed off its groundbreaking all-new three-door Veloster coupe – it has a rear door on the passenger side for greater useability - this a stunning looking coupe that doesn't have to be a 'hol-idays and high days' purchase. And Geneva allowed the marque

Compiled by Steve Loader

KIA – Hyundai's sister brand – has unveiled an all-new version of its Picanto city car. And while the current Picanto is available only as a five-door hatchback, the next generation ver-as a five-door hatchback, the next generation version will be offered in a sportier three-door, too.

The marque, currently riding high on the media and market acclaim for its muscular Sportage SUV/crossover, has announced the new Picanto's four powertrains will also be fresh out of the box and with the low and competitive CO2 emissions levels now demanded by a greener motor market.

FIAT and its associated brands continue to set new standards in CO2 reduction, according to JATO Dynamics, the world's leading automotive consultancy.

Fiat Automobiles itself logged a CO2 average of just 123.1 g/km (4.7 g/km less than the 2009 average), placing it top of all brands for the fourth year running, and well ahead of the European target of 130g/km, due to be met in 2015.

Fiat also ranked first among the motor groups with 125.9g/km, an improvement of five g/km on last year and taking into account brands such as Ferrari, Maserati and Alfa Romeo.

However, the Italian group's CO2 crackdown continues to be epitomised by its big-selling small cars such as the Fiat 500C pictured – just the kind of models that eco-conscious consumers are now turning to.

Mini Test

Honda Jazz

IF YOU want a good example of a company that listens to its customers you have to look at Honda. Although the Japanese firm is well known for innovation, it's also keen to ensure it promotes a culture of happy drivers.

And there's no better example of this than the firm's Jazz. More than just a sleeper hit, the compact Jazz has proven to be a UK best seller. By choosing to develop something that was more than just another supermini, Honda struck a chord with buyers seeking something with a small footprint but with the flexibility and practicality of something much bigger.

Success

This revised second-generation car builds on the original model's success. Presenting a chunkier face to the world, Honda's engineers have added a few aerodynamic tweaks to boost cabin refinement and overall efficiency. The latter is important, as this element plus selective engines improvements have resulted in economy and emissions gains. It's also revised the car's ride and handling performance to boost driver appeal and cabin comfort.

Talking of green issues, this Jazz has the honour of being the first small production hybrid. Keen to broaden the appeal of such technology beyond its Insight model, the Jazz hybrid follows on from the Japanese firm's sporting CRZ petrol-electric model.

There's more good news in the shape of the

It might not sound like much, but the previously used automated manual transmission wasn't met with universal appeal.

As a result. Honda listened, took on board the feedback and now offers a CVT that should please buyers seeking a smoother experience akin to than of a conventional auto, but without the fuel economy penalties.

Existing Jazz owners will be familiar with the car's 1.2 and 1.4-litre petrol engines, which now boast CO2 levels of 123 and 126g/km respectively in manual gearbox trim and return a combined fuel economy reading in the low 50s mpg. The hybrid borrows much from Honda's existing Insight model, right down to the CVT gearbox.

It manages 62.8mpg and boasts a lower 104g/km CO2 rating, the latter Honda claims is the lowest for an auto gearbox car in the Jazz's market sector.

On the road the petrol cars are as you would ${
m expect-willing, capable}$ and refined. In 1.4-litre trim plus the new CVT gearbox, the Jazz is easy to drive and the box offers a welcome extra layer of refinement over its predecessor.

Furthermore, the traditional enemies of CVT-equipped cars – inclines and fast-moving motorway traffic – are no barriers to progress. There's plenty of power available to get you moving and maintaining a steady speed.

This is also the case for the hybrid Jazz. Even in 'Eco' mode there's enough thrust available for out of town excursions, while urban motoring is dispatched with predictable ease.

The easy-to-read instrument displays keep you informed regarding fuel consumption and the current combination of engine and electric power, which do a clever job of nudging you in the direction of more considered and smoother driving behaviour.

Good though it is on the road, there's more to the Jazz than the driving experience. Its versa-tile nature is another major attraction for buyers, and the car's folding rear seats offer a greater level of versatility than the little Honda's more conventional rivals.

From furniture to bicycles, the Jazz will swallow many of these items whole. And for anyone seeking a car with a modest footprint, this feature is often a deal breaker. It also happens to be a hit with the business market; drivers who carry a lot of equipment but don't want – or their company car policy doesn't allow - a large, high CO2 car can opt for a Jazz with complete confidence.

With its well built and versatile cabin, a good level of standard kit plus the various improvements to the driving and ownership experience, Honda's Jazz remains a tough act to beat. The hybrid model will please those wanting to pay less for their motoring, too.

DAVEMAIRS

Kia Ceed

YOU know how it is. You've got an exciting trip planned and you and your mates have a barrow-load of gear to take with you.

And at some point someone – invariably the sensible, boring one – mentions transport. Quite how you and your grizzled chums, along with rucksacks, seats, telescopes and tripods – we were going to watch whales from aboard the ferry to Bilbao – are going to cram into your little runabout hadn't occurred to you though.

After much casting around, we borrowed a Kia Ceed 1.6 CRDi ISG. It is not a monster – think Ford Focus for size – but was larger than anything we had to hand.

As things worked out, travel plans changed and the whole operation became a two-car mission with just three in our vehicle. No bad thing though, as three people and their clobber was enough for this model.

We could have managed four, but it would have been a real squeeze and we might never have seen a pygmy-sized member of the party ever again.

However, as we all know, size isn't everything, as shown by the outstanding feature on the Ceed ISG – those last three letters are short for Intelligent Stop and Go.

The system works like this: when the car slows to below 3mph, say when approaching a junction or traffic lights, it stops. You select neutral and release the clutch and then simply restart when ready by depressing the clutch -10 per cent, for the record, but I don't expect you to measure it – and away you go, smoothly and wholly efficiently.

We're talking Kia's EcoDynamics technology here: an official combined fuel consumption of 67.3mpg on this Ceed and CO2 emissions of just 110g/km that also qualifies the car for zero-rated road tax for year one and just £20/year thereafter.

In short, the less time your engine is running, the better it is for both your pocket and your beleaguered environment.

The scientific bit is not my world, but as a driver I can happily report that, once I'd got used to it, I grew rather fond of the ISG system. All was smooth, with no juddering, and it was easy to believe that here was a glimpse at a brave new (and not quite as dirty) world.

The Ceed range arrived in 2007; an all-new model and name, designed and built in Europe to attack Europe's finest - the VW Golf, Ford Focus and Vauxhall Astra - and featuring facets from all three, plus a mould-breaking seven-year/100,000-mile warranty as a significant extra.

This was the perfect lure for the most sceptical punters; once in the showroom, the curious could quickly see that the Ceed and its three-door Proceed and Ceed SW estate spin-offs are good products

Kia now concedes that the mega-warranty was a gamble that could have gone expensively wrong if the Ceed engineering team had messed up, but it didn't and all Kia models now come with a seven-year warranty.

Aware that the 2007-vintage Ceed could be fidgety on the road, Kia also boosted the handling and ride when it gave the car a facelift in 2010.

As for new kit, Kia says the car has an upgraded interior, though this looked about the same as before; no criticism though, since everything feels well-made and durable.

There are also exterior cosmetics, notably a far sleeker and more upmarket grille.

But ISG on the car's junior 89bhp 1.6litre/six-speed manual diesel powertrain is the highlight of the revamp and using Kia's new green 'EcoDynamics' sub-branding with energy-saving tyres. Ceed prices start at £13,085.

My Money 24

www.mymoney24.co.uk:

This offer looks good - what's the catch?

I would be grateful for your opinion of the new Post Office bond that pays a yield of 1.5pc on top of the rate of inflation. I have read the terms and as far as I can see, the only downside is that you cannot withdraw your money for five years without providing a good reason and paying a penalty. I am happy with this, so is there anything else that I have missed?

There are two things you may have missed. Firstly, the return on the Post Office bond may not be calculated in exactly the way you think. And secondly, there is at least one rival index-linked product you might consider. The Post Office (0800 169 7500) bond is a five-year investment, with the return to savers calculated every April. So, if you invest, say, £1,000 and the retail prices index in April next year shows an annual rise of 5pc, your £1,000 will grow by 5pc plus the guaranteed 1.5pc top-up, turning it into £1,065. Now, you might think that in Year Two, your return is based on £1,065. Wrong! Your money goes back to square one. The £65 you have earned is frozen, and you start again with £1,000. The profits are paid out only at the end of the full five years. They are not compounded to earn even more as you go along. Of course, you might regard this as a small blot on an otherwise pretty landscape. After all, there are not many indexlinked investments to choose from. But there is one that has a couple of advantages of its own. Yorkshire Building Society's Protected Capital Account (0845 1200 100) pays the rate of inflation plus 0.1pc – but it pays income yearly throughout its five-year life. And, unlike the Post Office bond, you can hold this account as a tax-free Isa, which adds to the attraction. So if you want to draw an income or sidestep tax, this could be a better bet.

I have about £7,000 in a Natwest cash Isa, earning 0.5pc. Santander is offering 3.5pc. Should I take my money out of Natwest and open a Santander account? How can one bank pay so much more than another?

Whatever you do, don't take your Isa money from Natwest and think you can simply deposit it with Santander. If you withdraw money from an Isa, it loses its tax-free status. To stay taxfree, arrange for your existing bank to transfer the cash directly to your new bank. You must not touch it. But should you transfer? You are not really comparing like with like. The statement you sent me shows you have a cheap-and-cheerful Isa with Natwest. It has a variable interest rate that could rise if rates generally go up, you can operate it at your branch, and you are allowed instant access. The Santander leaflet you sent me offers a fixed 3.5pc, not a variable rate. You invest by post, not at a branch, and this is a two-year account that ties you in until 2013. If you are happy with the different terms, that's fine. But if you want the easy access that you have now, a better option might be the Halifax Isa Direct Reward account, It offers instant access, can be operated through a branch and pays 3pc interest.

I have a small private pension plan that matures in May. My pension provider told me I have the option to look on the open market for an annuity. I have found a company that beats my original annuity quote. As these firms must be registered with the Financial Services Authority, are there any problems I should be aware of?

Anyone saving in a private pension plan has the right to shop around on the open market before turning their retirement savings into an annuity The company that has managed your pension investments might not offer the best value annuity, so it is good to see that you were actually reminded that you have this right. As all annuity firms go through the same licensing checks, and are covered by the same compensation scheme, there are no hidden dangers.

Don't leave us hanging on – it's so annoying

Listening to hold music on the telephone or standing in long queues is something that winds many people up – and if it annoys you, you're unlikely to be cheered up by the revelation that we each spend an average of 33 weeks of our lives doing it. A study by the Co-operative Bank has found that the average hold time per phone call is 10 minutes That might be frustrating enough in itself, but some callers have been left twiddling their thumbs for more than an hour-and-a-half. The top culprits for leaving customers on hold are dominated by television, internet and phone providers, domestic energy suppliers, banks and insurance companies.

The worst queues are at supermarkets, banks and post offices.

In the short term, such shabby customer service leads to anger and frustration.

Scots are apparently the least patient people when being made to wait on the phone, with callers typically hanging up after being left hanging on for about 20 minutes

However, the research highlighted that consumers would vote with their feet if they were let down by poor service, with a third prepared to move their custom after being

Pensions changes 'a turning point'

The announcement this week that the state pensions system is to be given a complete overhaul has received a broad welcome from analysts, with one expert branding it "a turning

Work and pensions secretary Iain Duncan Smith said the existing system was too complex and means testing for pensioners discouraged many people from saving for retirement.

Although he did not unveil the details, there has been speculation that a single-tier pension could be worth about £140 a week. (Single people who receive the full state pension and pension credit currently get £132.60 a week.)

A move to a flat-rate state pension would remove disincentives for lower earners to build up savings, and such a change would be likely to benefit mothers, who currently lose out because of career breaks for raising children.

By ADAM AIKEN MyMoney24 editor

Joanne Segars, chief executive of the National Association of Pension Funds, was among those welcoming the announcement. "We are at a turning point for pensions in the UK," she said. "Radical state pension reform to create a single, simple and more generous state pension could take millions of pensioners out of poverty, and provide a firm foundation for saving for old age. For the first time in a generation, people would know that it pays to save.

"This is a golden opportunity for the government to begin meeting its commitment to 'reinvigorate occupational pensions' and to get the nation saving again. This comes not a moment too soon. The latest quarterly Real Retirement Report produced by Aviva suggested that more than two thirds of people did not know, or overestimate, the value of the state pension.

"Simplification will help to address this confusion and could encourage customers to make plans for their own retirement," said Paul Goodwin, head of pensions marketing at the

"With greater understanding of what individuals can expect from the state, people will be better placed to plan their own private savings.

There was also support for the news from accountants.

John Nunn, senior financial planning consultant at PKF, said: "Too often, people who have taken the trouble to save extra for their pensions find that their savings make them ineligible for pension credits and other benefits – so they end up paying twice for what they have. Meanwhile, those who have not bothered to save and just rely on the state pension get everything.

Taxman aiming to put a plug in the payments leak

People who work in and around the plumbing sector are the latest to be targeted by the authorities in a clampdown on people failing to declare their earnings and pay the right amount of tax.

They have until the end of August to make their disclosures and arrange payment.

HMRC said it would carry out investigations after that date, targeting those who have failed to come forward and make full declarations.

Anyone caught out by that move faces a "substantial" penalty and criminal prosecution.

"Our aim is to make it as easy as possible for plumbers to come forward, make a full disclosure and benefit from a reduced penalty," said Mike Wells, director of risk and intelligence at HMRC.

advantage of the amnesty, said Graham Sillett, tax partner of chartered accountants Lovewell

He said: "This is a generous offer. It is an opportunity to come clean where mistakes have been made, with penalties as low as 10pc.

Plumbers, gas fitters and heating engineers were being targeted because HMRC had obtained information from their trade organisation, but Mr Sillett said there were also indications that the amnesty could also be used by businesses generally.

It is the third such campaign run by HMRC in recent years. People with offshore accounts as well as doctors and dentists have already been in the spotlight.

Mr Sillett said the previous campaigns had resulted in significant numbers of people coming forward to make voluntary disclosures.

Isa countdown under way

The annual fight by Isa providers to get hold of people's cash is well and truly under way, with a number of new tax-free accounts being launched recently.

Anyone over 16 is allowed to invest up to £5,100 in a cash Isa in the 2010-11 tax year, but you cannot carry the allowance over. That means there is now less than a month to use this year's allowance before it is lost for

The banks and other financial providers know that many of us leave it until the last moment

why there is traditionally a spate of new products launched around this time.

According to Moneyfacts.co.uk, there are more cash Isas with introductory bonuses available today than at the same time in the past two years. Introductory bonuses can make accounts very attractive, but prospective customers need to remember that the rates they pay typically plummet to uncompetitive levels once the bonus period – which usually lasts 12 months - is up.

Spending on cars to rise

collectively planning to spend on cars over the next six months has hit a three-year high of £51.3bn, even though the number of people expecting to get a new or second-hand car has fallen slightly over the past half-year to 7.15 million.

The figures, compiled by Sainsbury's Finance, suggest that the average spend on a car will be about £7,170 up more than £500 on six months ago. "Although the number of people looking to buy a car has slightly dropped, the car industry should not be disheartened as the figures in this latest index present a much more encouraging picture for the sector than they did just 18 months to two years ago," said Steven Baillie, head of loans at Sainsbury's Finance.

"The VAT rise that came into force at the beginning of the year does not seem to be putting people off making a car purchase, and consumers appear to be realistic in knowing they are likely to need to spend a bit more.

The research also found that about one in five of those looking to buy a car will want to finance at least part of the purchase with a loan. It is thought that personal loans of £6.2bn will be advanced for this purpose over the next six months.

PICK OF THE WEEK

In association with the experts at Moneyfacts.co.uk, we highlight some of the best new products

Savings: Barclays

Barclays has released its Golden Isa Issue 3. This instant-access cash Isa pays a rate of 3.2pc, including a 1pc bonus for 12 months. (As with any rate including an introductory bonus, savers must be aware that the rate will revert to a lower figure once the bonus period expires.) The rate is guaranteed to follow any change in the base rate until March 1, 2012. The minimum investment is £1. Transfers in are not allowed. The account is available to investors aged 16 and over and can be operated in branch. Savers can also operate this account by telephone or online but they must have existing current accounts.

Why is it good?

With a minimum investment amount of just £1 and a market leading rate, this new deal from Barclays has secured its place as one of the market-leading no-notice Isas.

Savings: SagaSaga has increased the rate on its Three-Year Fixed-Rate Savings account, available via post only, to 4.2pc and it has launched an online-only version of the account. A monthly interest option is also available, paying 4.12pc. Savers can invest between £1 and £10m and further additions can be made whilst the issue remains open. Early access is allowed subject to penalty, depending on the account's remaining term, as follows: up to three years, 270 days; up to two years, 180 days; one year or less, 90 days. The accounts are available to savers aged 50 and over.

Why is it good? Saga's latest product review sees a rate increase of 0.35pc to its Three-Year Fixed Rate Savings account as well as the online launch. Paying 4.2pc, these deals sit amongst the other market-leading rates. Both bonds have the flexibility for withdrawals to be made during their

Mortgages: Woolwich

Woolwich (part of Barclays) has launched a fixed-rate deal costing 3.99pc to April 30, 2013. The maximum loan-to-value is 70pc and customers can borrow between £50,000 and £1m.

There is an arrangement fee of £199 and incentives of a free valuation fee for properties valued up to £2m. Remortgage borrowers can enjoy free legal fees and a £200 rebate.

Why is it good?

This fixed-rate mortgage offers customers with deposits of at least 30pc a competitive rate for two years. The deal has a small arrangement fee and a range of incentives are offered both to purchase and to remortgage borrowers. Flexible features such as the option to make overpayments and take payment holidays are also

Enterprise zone lobby urges Osborne to act

EAST Kent could become one of Government's flagship enterprise zones to help fuel job growth and attract new businesses in the run up to Pfizer's closure.

In what would be a revival of a Thatcher-era scheme, 10 areas of the UK could be selected as specialist zones that would benefit from company tax breaks and lenient planning rules.

Councils may also be able to keep all business rates they raise in the zones. Chancellor George Osborne said the plan – costing £100 million over four years – would help attract new business and boost employment.

Kent County Council leader Cllr Paul Carter and South Thanet MP Laura Sandys are expected to put forward a case at Whitehall pushing for east Kent to be considered as one of the 10 zones, despite speculation that northern parts of the country are being targeted.

They will use Pfizer's departure from Sandwich in 2012 and the resulting 2,400 job losses to argue their case.

Flagship

During an adjournment debate in the House of Commons this week, Ms Sandys told science minister David Willetts that east Kent, stretching along the Manston corridor, should be looked upon as a potential for the scheme.
"We would like the Government to look on this area as one of the flagship enterprise zones," she said.

Mr Willetts said the Government was focusing on all the issues surrounding Pfizer's decision to leave the Sandwich site, including the possibility of the area becoming a specialist zone.

"There is much work to be done on the exact design - to what extent it is a matter of rate relief, liberalising the planning regime or other special tax reliefs," he said.

Both the definition of the scope for enterprise zones and the choice of the areas where those will be are important. I know that the case for this area of Kent will be made powerfully."

Under the Conservative Government during the mid-1980s to early 1990s, 38 zones were established - the most famous being the redevelopment of the Isle of Dogs in London's Docklands, now Canary Wharf – but many of these lapsed back into depression after only a

Mr Osborne argued the new zones would focus on areas of high growth, not just physical decline.

The move gives fresh hope to politicians fighting to save the east Kent economy and the thousands of Pfizer workers at risk of losing their

Ms Sandys, who has called on ministers to press Pfizer for more time before the redundancy process starts, said the area needed Government commitment for the long term.

"We have a once in a lifetime opportunity to turn our local economy around so that in years to come my colleagues and I can proudly state, Yes, our area is part of the South East economy'," she said.

During the same parliamentary debate, the issue of transport was also raised. Ms Sandys said the east Kent economy had been crying out for years for better transport links. "The area is 70 miles for London, but can take two hours to reach by train," she said.

Upgrade

"The minister [Mr Willetts] experienced a very lengthy train journey of two-and-a-half hours because of both a slow train and works on the line, so he knows that, per mile, Sandwich to London is one of the slowest routes in the country.
"I therefore ask for the Government's support for our bid to get the rail line from London to Thanet upgraded so that we can get to Thanet within the hour.

"That would revolutionise our local economy." Mr Willetts admitted he had experienced a "painfully slow" journey on a recent visit to Sandwich and said there were some transport

He said Government would consider calls for an improved rail service between Thanet and London as well as a new station on the line.

He also touched on the significance of Manston airport to the economy.

Ms Sandys added that following Pfizer's decision to leave Sandwich, it was vital for Government to help secure investment and encourage new business start-ups on the site.

Still best placed to beat the downturn

ASHFORD business bosses say the town is booming thanks to substantial investment from both the private and public sectors.

Since the turn of the year a number of multimillion-pound companies have moved into the market town, while existing firms have also expanded. National retail giant Dobbies led the way by opening an £8 million 48,000 sq ft store at the fast-expanding Eureka Park. The move created 120 jobs.

Eureka's developers, Quadrant Estates, are now building a new phase of offices at the site, alongside junction nine of the M20.

Tesco and Sainsbury's are also preparing to invest heavily in expanding their supermarkets

Tesco will create an extra 75 jobs if it receives the go-ahead to increase its Park Farm store from 40,000 sq ft to 55,000 sq ft, while Sainsbury's will create 350 full- and part-time jobs if it is allowed to double the size of its store at the Warren Retail Park.

Meanwhile SuperCups Vending has just cut the ribbon on a new headquarters, showroom, warehouse and distribution centre, giving it four times as

The firm, which began in a garage in the town, now employs 42 people and is looking to grow its workforce further.

Ashford's Future managing director Judith Armitt, pictured right, said: "Ashford continues to demonstrate we are the best place to do business. Ashford's attractiveness as a business location is boosted by excellent road and rail links, making it one of the most accessible towns. It is reassuring to see more companies are being encouraged to expand or move into the area.

We thought we had it bad when all the boys at school wanted to be David Beckham and all the girls wanted to be Jordan. Now thousands of youngsters across the country have their hearts set on being the next Jedward or Cheeky Girls.

And why? For the perceived financial wealth that comes with fame. These bling-obsessed teens don't want to be teachers or nurses, plumbers or painters.

They want to be mega-rich pop stars, with all the associated trappings: a 20-bedroom mansion, a fleet of luxury cars, a miniature dog in a handbag and a vat of fake tan.

Chancellor George Osborne's Project Merlin has brought a new type of mega-rich superstar to the fore - the bankers.

The agreement between the Government and the UK's four biggest banks will disclose bonuses paid out to their top earners. Barclays' new chief executive Bob Diamond received a £6.5 million bonus for 2010. That's on top of his £250,000 salary.

And if Diamond hits future targets, his 2010 pay package could

RBS and Lloyds, both of which were saved from going under by huge Government bail-outs, also handed out bumper bonuses to their bosses

RBS chief Stephen Hester received £2m, while Lloyds counterpart Eric Daniels was given £1.45m.

So that's a £9m bonus if you head up a profitable bank, and £1.45 million if you don't. Not bad either way.

Expect to see Diamond, Hester and Daniels alongside the likes of Hollywood A-listers and Premier League footballers in the pages of the glossy magazines soon.

And kids everywhere saying: "When I grow up I want to become a hedge-fund manager for an irresponsible, Government-funded banking corporation."

CANTERBURY Cheesemakers are working seven days a week to keep up with export demand.

Dairy producers say a boom in tourism combined with the weak pound has seen an increase in overseas sales – with goods packed off as far afield as China, Hong Kong, Mexico and the USA. Jane Bowyer (pictured left), maker of the award-winning Ashmore cheeses at Dargate, has just packed wheels of four different cheeses for an artisanal baker's shop in Kuala Lumpur.

The owner saw the cheeses at the firm's counter at the Goods Shed in Canterbury, visited the dairy and now plans to feature them in his sandwiches.

Meanwhile, the Belgian town of Grez-Doiceau near Waterloo, hopes to feature them in a food fair as part of its St George's Day festivities.

Ms Bowyer said: "We have had such a good

Offshore wind farm work is under way

WORK has begun on building the London Array offshore wind farm.

The first of the 177 foundations, each weighing 268 tonnes – the equivalent of 35 double-decker buses - was sunk into the Thames Estuary on Tuesday.

Once phase one of the wind farm is completed next year, 175 turbines will generate enough electricity to power 480,000 homes per year. Tuesday's milestone was hailed by the energy firm behind the London Array project.

Anders Eldrup, chief executive of DONG Energy, said: "This is a significant milestone for London Array off the shore and into the water.

generate low-carbon electricity."
Dr Frank Mastiaux, chief executive of E.ON climate and renewables, said: "Installing the first foundation on schedule marks another major step in the construction of the world's largest offshore wind farm.

"It's a great moment for the team now all the detailed planning and preparation over years can finally be seen out in the water.

Dr Sultan Al Jaber, chief executive of Abu Dhabi-based joint partner

GENERATION NEXT: London Array's Cleve Hill substation, near Graveney

Masdar, said: "The installation of the first foundation demonstrates the commitment and desire to make London Array a reality, and is testament to the industry-leading resources and experience exemplified by this strategic partnership. Masdar is proud to be at the heart of this ambitious effort."

Each foundation consists of a tubular steel monopile, driven 20 to 50 metres into the seabed, and a large yellow transition piece, which is fixed over the top of the monopile to provide the base for the turbine.

The monopiles are between 33 and 65 metres long and weigh between 200 and 650 tonnes, while the transition pieces are between 20 to 28metres high and weigh between 245 to 345 tonnes.

London Array is being built about $20\mathrm{km}$ off the north Kent coast.

If approved, the second phase will add enough capacity to bring the total to 1,000MW.

Winning a share of the spoilers

NEARLY 50 jobs have been created in Kent thanks to the launch of the new Range Rover Evoque.

Magna International, which has a base in Hartlip, near Sittingbourne, won the contract to supply bumpers, sills, rear spoilers, interior doors and rear quarter-panels.

The £400-million deal will see 46 jobs created at Hartlip and a further 90 at the firm's Merseyside base.

In total, Range Rover awarded more than £2 billion of contracts to UK companies. Jaguar Land Rover's director of purchasing, Ian Harnett, said: "The UK's automotive supply base is truly world class. We demand the highest standards from suppliers.

"We focus on many aspects of supplier capability, including technology, quality, materials, environmental performance, efficiency and cost. It is testament to the excellence of companies and employees that 50 per cent of our component business is within "The Evoque is a brand new model, so every vehicle we build is incremental volume for us and our suppliers, which is also good news for employment across the industry."

Business secretary Vince Cable also welcomed the deals. During a tour of the Merseyside factory, he said: "Jaguar Land Rover's £2 billion of contracts to businesses in the UK to supply components shows the automotive supply chain is capable of winning major contracts and creating jobs.

CREATIVE agency Dandelion was the UK's sole winner at a global brand repositioning awards

The small Smeeth-based firm picked up a Rebrand 100 trophy in recognition of their work with pharmaceuti-cal company Martindale Pharma.

Managing director Steve Howard said: "We are absolutely delighted to have won this award. It just goes to show that with the right attitude towards branding, a small agency outside of London can still be recognised on a global scale.

"We aim to give our clients the best possible service, without the London price tag, and the fact that we are the only UK agency this year to win the award, just underlines what we always believed was possible."

SHEPHERD Neame has received a silver award in the Green Tourism Business Scheme.

The Faversham brewery was given the award after proving to be actively engaged in reducing the negative environmental and social impacts of its tourism opera-

Sheps' visitor centre manager Graham Hukins said: "We are very pleased to have received this award, which recognises the sustainable practices we have in place for the benefit of the environment, the community, visitors and the company.

"It fits in other local initiatives such as the Faversham Walks and Food and Drink Trails that Shepherd Neame supports.

SOCIAL care provider Avante Partnership held its inaugural Stars Awards night to recognise committed staff who had contributed to the organisation's success

The partnership – which includes Avante Care and Support, Avante Community Support and Stepahead Support - was established in 1990 and is now one of the largest care providers in the South East and London.

Chief executive Cedric Fredrick said: "I felt it only seemed right that staff - past and present - should be saluted and recognised as an Avante Star, and what better way to do this than to have an awards night? From this the Stars Awards was born for a night to remember."

SMALL and medium-sized firms are being advised to get their book-keeping in order, on the eve of a Customs clampdown.

The warning was issued by TaxAssist Accountants, based in Larkfield, and comes after HMRC announced its Business Records Check campaign.

The company's Gary Richards said: "Keeping up to date with book-keeping can be a big administrative job that often becomes a burden to small businesses.

"However, keeping on top of records can lead to better management of your business and its cashflow. Plus, HMRC is less likely to take further action if your records are found to be satisfactory.'

Partners' bonus spreads wealth

JOHN Lewis workers will receive an 18 per cent bonus after the group posted a 10 per cent rise in profits, writes Simon Robinson.

The bumper pay day will go to all of John Lewis Partnership's 76,500 full-time workers, including those at the Bluewater (1,317) and Tunbridge Wells (238) branches.

The PLC – which includes 32 John Lewis stores and 244 Waitrose supermarkets – saw profits to January 29, this year, rise £41.3 million to £431m.

Under a £194.5m Partnership Bonus deal each full-time employee, from shop assistants through to the chief executive, will be rewarded with a one-off payment equivalent to 18 per cent of their salary.

Improving

John Lewis Partnership chairman Charlie Mayfield paid tribute to the employees, known as partners, for their hard work.

He said: "Our partners have shown their commitment to continually improving what we do every day.

"The profits we make go to partners and to improving the business. I'm delighted that we've announced partners will receive a bonus of 18 per cent - an average of more than nine weeks' pay.

"In addition, we have paid £267m into our pension fund in the last year. Looking to the future, while we expect more difficult conditions for much of the year, we are confident of our plans. We will invest £600m this year and expect to create 4,300 new jobs.'

One area that has already benefited from investment is Tunbridge Wells, with the west Kent town's John Lewis at home store opening in November, 2010.

Branch manager Gabby Armstrong said: "The shop opened with a 90 per cent majority of new partners, with the total partners working here 220.

"Since opening, we experienced a buoyant Christmas and clearance period, where the team reacted fabulously to the high demand, offering an exceptional level of service - a great achievement for all our partners.

"Bonus day for us is a new and exciting experience. This will the first time many reap the rewards of being a partner in John Lewis It's our business and we should all feel proud of our achievements.

"I'm very proud of the team's achievement here. They are amazing, so bonus day is our time to celebrate.

John Lewis Bluewater managing director Karen Lord said: "We underwent a major refurbishment in 2009, introducing a fourth trading floor featuring one of only two food halls in the division's portfolio and a new kitchenware department.

"The success of this led to the branch finishing the full trading year at plus-12 per cent. This was a record year's trade for us and a result our partners are proud of.

The food hall continues to get positive feedback from customers. We are looking forward to another exciting year and our part-ners are committed to continuing to give great service."

John Lewis saw operating profit rise 22.2 per cent to £201.2m, while Waitrose profits went up three per cent, £8.1m to £274.9m.

VISIONARY: Turner Contemporary gallery

Seeing the light during preview

TOURISM-based businesspeople have been given a sneak preview of the Turner Contemporary gallery in Margate.

More than 150 hairdressers, hoteliers, taxi drivers and restaurateurs were treated to a tour of the attraction, which opens next month.

Margate Renewal Partnership director Derek Harding said the gallery would have a positive impact on Thanet and beyond.

"It was fantastic to see so many people," he said. "This is going to be a huge boost for Margate and the whole area. We want to involve key local businesses to show them the benefits Turner Contemporary will bring.

"I think it's fair to say a number of people came along thinking one thing but left with a completely different view.

concept which will help the area.
"I haven't had much to do with art in the past. I thought I wouldn't understand it, but I didn't realise how beautiful some of Turner's works are and I'm quite impressed."
South Lodge Guest House owners Bill and Christa Hackney said: "It will do well for the area, the building is very impressive, iconic even, from the outside, but is even more impressive inside.

Berth of profits boost

HIGHWAY Marine has gone hitech in a bid to boost profits.

The Sandwich-based firm has enlisted the services of The Waypoint, which enables boat owners to book berths over the internet or via smartphone.

The online booking facility, launched at last month's London Boat Show, helps marinas maximise revenue on empty berths by advertising them on a central database Sailors can log in and immediately search and book a berth in their marina of choice with just a click of a button.

Highway Marine's mooring manager, James Blackmore, said: "We wanted to gain web presence for our berths and The Waypoint is a great platform to achieve this without having to invest heavily in new technology or web advertising. We are looking forward to seeing the benefits of using it over the coming months and the ease with which sailors will be able to book berths with us.

The Waypoint co-founder Charles Bacon said: "Being webbased, we benefit from a number of advantages over the typical database or office whiteboard.

"By updating vacancies online, the whole boating world can now find out about berths. Also. because it's free for marinas to sign up for the first year, there's nothing to risk and everything to gain. A number of marinas have already signed up and we delighted to welcome Highway on board."

Highway Marine has been www.kent.ac.uk/kbs providing services to sailors and boat owners since the 1970s.

Career U-turn rediscover his

THE B G INTERVEW

Farm estate manager Oliver Doubleday made the decision to take a career U-turn while out driving in the Kent countryside. The father-of-three chose not to pursue his work as a molecular biologist and returned to Bax Farmhouse at Tonge, near Sittingbourne, to continue the business' 150-year association with his family. Mr Doubleday keeps his eye in through the East Malling Research facility and believes further food science has a big part to play in the future. He spoke to Business Week editor Simon Robinson

LIVER Doubleday says he is the man with the oil can. The 59year-old explains that his job on his family's Sittingbourne estate is to keep things running and the wheels turning.

"I really like people to get on and I really want to facilitate that," he said. "In some ways I see myself as the guy who's there to keep an eye on things and if I see something that needs oil, then I will oil it.

"I'm not hands-on in the sense of rolling up my sleeves and driving tractors. I'm hands-on in the fact that I'm about and I'm busy, and I'm talking to people and encouraging them, trying to make it happen.

"The Brazilians have a saying that translates as, The farmer's eye fattens the bullock', and the English equivalent is, The farmer's boot is the best fertilis-

"It means there's nothing better than getting out and looking and seeing and mixing it up. By the same token, I try not to interfere because I've got really good people who are doing well and I don't want to introduce confusion by getting in their

As managing director of GH Dean and Co Ltd, Doubleday oversees the family firm's vast estate, which consists of more than 1,100 hectares of arable, 2,500 ewes and 140 hectares of fruit - apples, pears and cher-

He began working on the farms in 1981 but it was not a given that he would continue the long father-to-son lineage.

Pointing to family portraits hung side-by-side in his unassuming Bax Farmhouse office, Doubleday explained: "I'm the son, grandson and great grandson of farmers. My family has been in farming here for more than 150 years.

"But I was trained as a molecular biologist and carried out post-doctoral research in Belgium, Holland then briefly in the US before coming back here.

"The turning point came for me when I was driving through Kent on a beautiful spring day.

"At the time I was not unsuccessful as a biologist, but I was working very long hours and could see people like me getting divorced.

"I thought to myself, 'Do you want to end up as a pro-fessor in Paris filling in forms and funding applications? Where's the quality of life?' So I decided to come back to the farm.'

The father-of-three has fused his family's business with his scientific background, taking an interest in research and development of the farming industry.

HIS interest has seen Doubleday take up the position of chairman at East Malling Research (EMR), the UK's principal provider of horticultural research and develop-

"I had been very serious about science and I still really enjoy it, so it's great to be the chairman of EMR. I'm there to support and offer guidance, so I'm closely involved with it and get to know about what's happening.

"There's a whole range of fantastic work being done. A member of the team's recent project saw him undertake the sequencing of the strawberry genome that's fun.

"I'm immensely proud of what EMR has achieved and quite passionate in my belief that we have to reinvest in research facilities.

"People think it's a cover for GM [genetically modifed], but that's not the main game in town. There has been a clear warning on the 'perfect storm' we will soon face in terms of climate change and the need for more food, water and energy. This needs to be addressed by

has been farming in county for 150 years

"It is going to be important in future to produce food with fewer resources, less water and lower environmental impact. There is a perception that farming is getting worse in terms of pesticides and GM foods but this is just not true. We are doing it so much better now."

INFLUENCE: With former Labour minister Hilary Benn

Doubleday says scientific research, coupled with huge advances in farming machinery and technology, had transformed the industry in a single generation.

"I'm producing three to four times more than my father used to produce and the fruit is better quality. We understand what we're doing a bit better, the fruit is hanging better on our trees and we can produce more and at a better quality - something that is genuinely necessary.

"Our customers want the fruit to be absolutely first class. In the past, quality was less of an issue as fruit was in short supply and had to be locally sourced.

"But the rate of change in the past generation has been astonishing and the one certainty for the future is uncertainty. If you look at the past and see how rapidly things have evolved, the one good bet is it's not going to stop, things will get more and more sophisticated."

The farmer, who sells his produce to the leading supermarkets, said he was pleased to see a recent resurgence in shoppers buying English, seasonal fruit.

"The UK is deficient in horticultural production - salads and veg, and apples and pears," he said.

"But our strawberries have been a great success These growers have done an excellent job and have managed to displace imports. They have increased the season and produced really high-quality products and people have recognised that.

"I would rather our fruit was locally sourced. Often imported goods have been on long journeys and whoever bred it did it in a way more for its ability to stand up to long journeys than to give it a nice taste.

"I went to the Taste of Kent Awards and was surprised by the enthusiasm of the people and amount of buzz in the room.

"Clearly from the number of entrants it's obvious that we've got a vibrant sector in the county and people who are dedicated to providing really good food and drink.

"Tm a little part of that. We think we grow a pretty mean apple and a really nice cherry. I welcome locally produced. I think it's responsible. People should care about the quality of their food."

IKE the Taste of Kent award nominees, Doubleday is more concerned about the quality of his products than making huge profits. He said: "Our turnover is about £3 million, not as high as it would be if we were selling packed fruit."

Which begs the question; why don't you pack your fruit rather than pay someone else to do it for you?

"I think it's very important in life to decide not only what you do but also what you're not going to do," he

"I'm very clear that I'm quite busy enough with what I do at the moment and I'm not looking to do more things. I'm quite happy if I can find good people to do more things for me but that's another matter. "Above all else we have to be excellent. If you're not in the top quartile in farming you're probably not making any profit.

"Certainly if you're not in the top half you're not making profit. I aim to be at the very, very top, which we are able to be with our arable produce.

"This is not because I'm particularly clever but we are blessed in Kent with good soil and climate. Our wheat yield is probably 20 per cent above UK average. If I was getting the average I would not be profitable and if I was at the lower end of the average I would be losing

"So it's very important to be very good at what you do. It's a very competitive market and I'm not just talking about my neighbour - it's a global market.

Eyes on the prize for IoD's shortlisted trio

By SIMON ROBINSON

simon.robinson@kosmedia.co.uk

THREE Kent business bosses have been shortlisted for an Institute of Directors' prize.

The efforts of Kevin Kneebone, Nicky Pearson and Steve Martin have all been recognised ahead by the IoD's London and South East Director of the Year awards.

in London on Tuesday, March 22.

Kneebone, managing director at landmine clearance firm BACTEC International has been nominated in the international business up to £24.99 million category

During his eight years with the Rochester-based business he has moved control of the company to a board of directors but also found the time to get his hands dirty in the field.

"I like to lead from the front and set an example," he said. "Recently I was in the middle of the Baltic Sea working on a project disposing of unexploded ordnance with leading edge in-house technology developed by BACTEC. I'll shortly be heading off to the Middle East to do the same.'

Pearson founded The Beauty Works in Dartford in 1993. The managing director has been shortlisted in the £5m to £24.99m category. The company designs and commissions the manufacture of consumer health, fitness and electrical beauty products and clients include Tesco, Asda, Next, Sainsbury's, Wilkinsons, Aldi and New Look

Having survived the 2008 collapse of another major client, Woolworths, the company now boasts a turnover of £5 million and 10 staff.

"We believe we can do anything any of our clients ask of us," said Pearson. "There is no hierarchy here, everyone contributes with ideas and we are constantly moving forward. As a result we can move and respond much quicker than our bigger competitors.

Martin is in the running for Director of the Year for companies with a turnover of up to £4.99m.

He founded Xmo Strata in 2002 and has grown it into one of the UK's leading sign installation and maintenance companies, with clients including BP, Shell, Esso and Chevron.

True to his desire to establish the safest and best-quality service provider in the field, he has refused to cut back on staff training and development during the recession and encourages his teams to take the lead.

He said: "I like my staff to give me solutions. I couldn't fit a sign in a million years so if we are looking at a new procedure I'll get four or five people together and we'll try it, take suggestions, try it again and agree the best way.

The IoD awards are sponsored by PricewaterhouseCoopers.

The firm's South East regional leader, John Minards, said: "This year we received a record number of entries and the calibre of the nominations was incredibly high.

"All the finalists have demonstrated best in class performance and we would like to congratulate them on reaching

BUSINESS WEEK SPOTLIGHT HOSPITALITY

Sparkling jewel in port's crown

AN ELEGANT seafront hotel is set to reopen after being restored to its original Regency splendour.

The 81-bedroom Best Western Dover Marina Hotel and Spa has undergone a multi-millionpound renovation and now boasts three conference rooms, a restaurant and bar, seafront coffee shop and ice cream parlour and a fitness and spa centre.

The hotel, which takes up a large mid-section of the five-storey Grade II-listed Waterloo Crescent terrace, is being run by Leaf Hotels, which operates two other hotels in east Kent. Sixty jobs have been created at their latest hotel.

Leaf Hotels general manager David Otteson said he was delighted with the results of the six-month restoration project.

"The hotel is the jewel in Dover's crown, with breathtaking views across the beach and the harbour to the Channel and beyond to France," he said.

"Thanks to its fusion of 21st-century comfort and 19th-century styling, the hotel is full of character and charm. With excellent access to ferry and cruise terminals, it's ideal for business and leisure.

"This is a wonderful place to stay, an ideal base to enjoy the delights of Kent, or a day trip to France and Belgium."

The hotel boss also praised the quality of the refurbishment work undertaken by award-winning interior design practice Nicholas Hollinshead Interiors.

He said: "The brief was to blend the original 1830s features with modern-day facilities and the result is stunning. Wallpapers, carpets and furniture have been sourced from all over the world to make this one of the most stylish hotels in Kent. We are all thrilled with the outcome."

Tourism champion Visit Kent's chief executive, Sandra Matthews-Marsh, said the hotel will be a boost to the county's tourism industry.

"They are to be congratulated for having the vision, dedication and commitment to deliver such an exciting project," she said.

"The hotel is a welcome addition to the hospitality sector. The county needs additional high-quality bed stock and the Best Western Dover Marina Hotel and Spa offers just that."

The hotel, formerly known as the Churchill, caters for weddings, meetings and conferences, plus theme nights, fine dining parties and private dining.

It will be officially reopened on Thursday, March 24.

LEEDS Castle's newly-restored private function wing has proven a huge success – with wedding bookings alone at a four-year high.

The historic castle's Maiden's Tower has been converted into a multi-purpose conference facility and also boasts five bedrooms with en-suite bathrooms.

The Tower, which played host to movie-star parties in the 1920s and '30s and was the setting for secret political discussions during World War Two, was reopened in its current guise in October, last year.

Leeds Castle's hospitality business manager Debbie Matthews said feedback had been overwhelmingly positive.

"It's going really well," she said. "The facilities have been well received. The Tower appeals to different markets. Wedding bookings are buoyant - the highest in four years - but corporate bookings have also been high thanks to the two flexible support rooms we can offer.

"The great thing is that we're yet to see just how fantastic the Maiden's Tower can be. Once the summer comes we can get the most out of the private garden. We're really pleased with the response.'

Built in the early 12th century to replace the earlier Saxon manor of Esledes, Leeds Castle was later home to a succession of kings and queens.

Perhaps its most famous owner was Henry VIII, who spent lavishly to transform the castle from a rugged fortress into a royal palace and was responsible for much of its splendour.

He ordered the construction of the Maiden's Tower in about 1544 in preparation for the visit of his first queen, Catherine of Aragon, to house the royal maids of honour.
